I. JURISDICTION AND LABOR ORGANIZATION

From February 1 through May 22, 1987, Respondent managed a complex of five homes for developmentally disabled adults in Camarillo, California. It received over $250,000 in Government funds to do so, of which over $5000 came from Federal sources. Respondent thus managed a health care institution as defined by Section 2(14) during that period; and, so doing, was engaged in and affecting commerce within Section 2(6) and (7).

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT

A. Evidence

1. Background

By contract with an enterprise known as Total Living Continuum (TLC), Respondent took over management of the Camarillo homes from TLC as of February 1, 1987. The homes, each with six "client" beds, were named Bedford, Catalina, Harmony, Loma, and Rowland.[2] Respondent also operated similar facilities elsewhere in Southern California at the time. Gary Phillip Gill, Ph.D., with the titles executive director and clinical director, is Respondent's ranking official. Beneath him in the Camarillo chain of command were Terri Guiboa and

[1] Sec. 8(a)(3) forbids an employer from "discriminat[ing] in regard to hire or tenure of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization." Sec. 8(a)(1) prohibits an employer from "interfer[ing] with, or coerc[ing] employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7" of the Act. Sec. 7 guarantees employees "the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations . . . and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection . . . ."

[2] Although the contract plainly envisioned permanency, Respondent terminated the arrangement by letter to TLC dated May 22, 1987, returning control to TLC. Respondent had concluded, according to the letter, that it did not "have the resources in terms of money, personnel and time . . . to properly operate the five TLC facilities."

Jean Turnage, entitled "facility administrators."[3] Gill transferred them from an Orange County facility, placing Guiboa in charge of Bedford, Loma, and Rowland, and Turnage in charge of the other two.

Gill testified that the five homes were "quite short staffed" when the changeover took place; that Respondent needed "at least" 12 or 13 additional employees. Respondent consequently began advertising for help immediately, according to Gill, and gave tryouts to "a large number of" the resulting applicants. In some instances, Gill continued, Respondent was "so desperate that it did not follow the tryout procedure."[4]

Gill further testified that "continuity of staff" was desired; that "it was important to keep people who had learned to work with the clients, and to maintain as much stability as possible with respect to the staff." Gill recalled, as well, that a case manager for the Tri-County Regional Center, which monitored the homes on behalf of the California Department of Developmental Services, was "very concerned that [Respondent] keep on as many TLC staff as possible" to minimize client anxiety.[5]

All the alleged discriminatees were on the TLC staff before the changeover, with three—Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward—having the title of house supervisor and possessing certain indicia of true supervisory authority. Among Respondent's first actions, coincident with the installation of Guiboa and Turnage as facility administrators, was to divest those three of supervisory status; and, a few days later, to give each the title of program coordinator.

By memorandum dated February 9 to families of the "residents," Gill stated, referring to Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward, that Respondent was "extremely fortunate that three of the most experienced House Managers from TCL are working with us, although in a new capacity." The memorandum also states that most staff salaries would be "increased substantially, which will allow us to better retain our current staff."

By memorandum to the employees dated February 11, Gill sought to dispel "rumors" that Respondent intended to replace "all of the old staff," proclaiming, "I want to assure you that I have no intention of doing that." The same memorandum stated that, while Respondent "will be instituting a slightly different system," it wanted the stafff "to carry on with the current programs" for the present. Referring to Crowel's, Thompson's, and Woodward's new roles, it stated that their "initial responsibility is to make sure that the current program is maintained"; and that, upon introduction of the new program, they "will assist in training staff in how to implement it as well as in making sure it is operated properly."

[3] The parties stipulated that Guiboa and Turnage were supervisors and/or agents of Respondent for purposes of the Act.

[4] Gill testified that "most of" the applicants "were tried out for just several hours and paid out of petty cash" if not retained.

[5] The case manager stressed, per Gill, that the "clients do not like changes and . . . are difficult to work with, and it's therefore important to keep people who have learned to work with them and to maintain as much stability as possible."

2. Organizational activity

The idea of union representation apparently was first broached on February 4 in a conversation among Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward. The next day Thompson raised the matter in a telephone conversation with Dennis Shaw, an official of the Union, and an organizational meeting took place on February 12 at a Bob's Big Boy restaurant. The meeting was conducted by Shaw and attended by perhaps 10 employees. Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward signed union cards during the meeting, distributed cards to coworkers, and otherwise espoused representation during the ensuing few days. The other three alleged discriminatees also signed cards: Long and Pickrell at work about February 12 and McMillian in Thompson's car on February 16. These three solicited the signatures of others, as well.

On February 20, the Union filed a petition for election with the NLRB.[6] Gill testified that he first learned of the union activity on February 20 when informed of the filing. Thompson testified, on the other hand, that she told Gill, following a "very hostile" staff meeting on February 18, that he "shouldn't have a bad attitude with everyone else, because [she] was the one that started the union drive." Gill did not address this incident in his testimony, but did acknowledge that he knew before February 20 that some of the employees were upset and had been circulating a petition. He added, however, that he "never understood [that] to have anything to do with the Union."

The record suggests that Guiboa knew of the union ferment almost from its inception, and that Turnage also was aware well before Gill's professed first knowledge. Thus, Thompson testified without contradiction that she told Guiboa about it shortly after her initial telephone conversation with Union Official Shaw; and Long testified, likewise without contradiction, that he overheard an exchange between Turnage and Guiboa, on February 12 in which Guiboa wondered where Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward were, and Turnage replied that she thought they were starting a union.[7]

3. Turnage's alleged February 16 misconduct

McMillian, who had been vacationing in the East since before the changeover, first worked for Respondent on February 16. Thompson, who is her sister, drove her to work that day, apprising her of the union activity and inducing her to sign a card. That afternoon at work, according to McMillian, she asked coworker Angie Moreno if she had signed a card. Some time later, McMillian testified, Turnage told her that she was "starting on the wrong foot" by "trying to get people to sign union cards at work," and that she would have "to be loyal to the Doc if [she] wished to work for" Respondent.

[6] An election was held March 21. The tally was 11 to 9 for representation, with 10 challenged ballots. The matter apparently was never finally resolved because of Respondent's withdrawal from management in May.

[7] Guiboa did not refer to Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward by name, according to Long, but instead as "the three musketeers—an appellation by which they were known to coworkers and management alike. Asked his notion of the term's derivation, Gill testified that the three "work together in concert, they spend a lot of time together, they share certain concerns, they are sort of presenting a unified front." He continued that he "never understood it to mean having any implications or repercussions or any connection with the unionization efforts."

McMillian's rendition of this incident is uncontroverted. Turnage did not testify; moreover, Respondent concedes in its brief that Turnage "probably did make the threats" attributed to her.

4. The five discharges of February 22 and 23

a. Additional background

Gill testified that his responses, on learning of the election petition, were several. First, he spoke with Guiboa and Turnage. They told him they knew the employees were discontented, he recalled, but claimed ignorance of any union activity. He then called TLC President Mark Katz, declaring that Respondent was rescinding the contract by which it had assumed management of the homes, after which he had "two or three" telephone conversations with the Tri-County Regional Center. The Regional Center prevailed on him to rescind the contract, he testified, at the same time intimating that the intrusion of a union would be a "bad precedent."[8]

Gill conferred with a lawyer on February 21, assertedly telling him that the filing of the petition put him in "an awkward position" inasmuch as he had "made some decisions about staffing changes and [did not] want it to appear that [he was] doing it because of the union activity." The lawyer recommended, according to Gill, that Respondent meet that problem by issuing written termination notices to those being discharged.

Each of the five alleged discriminatees fired on February 22 and 23 received a written notice of termination, after which the practice was dropped. All were signed by Gill and dated February 22.

The record contains no substantial evidence that Gill's decision to effect the February 22 and 23 discharges in fact was made before he received word of the election petition or otherwise learned of the union activity. It contains compelling evidence, on the other hand, at least with regard to the three program coordinators, that the decision was reached and carried out in haste. Thus, by memorandum to the families dated February 22, Gill stated:

> When I wrote to you before, I had indicated that Lesi Crowel, Gwen Thompson, and Vince Woodward would be functioning in the newly created position of Program Coordinator. Unfortunately that system did not work as well as I had envisioned, and I have concluded that we can provide more closely coordinated supevision by relying on the Facility Administrators. . . . In view of our decision not to use Program Coordinators, I am temporarily bringing up a few of our Orange County supervisors to help institute our new . . . program a bit sooner than I had planned. [Emphasis added.]

b. The discharge of Pickrell

Pickrell, a programmer at Catalina, was the first of the six to be told, receiving a termination notice from Turnage the morning of February 22. The notice gave as reason for the action:

> After reviewing your performance we have concluded that your work performance is not satisfactory and we no longer desire your services.

Pickrell testified that after he read the notice he asked Turnage for an explanation that she told him to speak with Gill and that Gill told him, simply, that he had decided, after "consulting with supervisors and other staff," that Pickrell's "services were no longer needed." Gill did not describe any such consultations in his recital, nor does the record contain any convincing evidence otherwise that they occurred.

At the time Pickrell was romantically involved with Crowel, who was to be fired later that morning. Gill testified that "one of the considerations" behind Pickrell's discharge, although not "a major component," was Grill's concern that his continued presence after Crowel's departure "might cause problems."

A more basic reason, Gill averred, was that while Pickrell "worked well with the clients and implemented the existing program," he "was opposed to the changes that [Gill] was trying to make." Gill elaborated:

> I felt like I had to make some changes, and I felt like I had to put together a team that would be willing to make some changes and modifications and would be willing to work with me. I just simply felt that I had to put together a team that was supportive of the kind of programming and clinical inttervention that I wanted to make.

Gill admittedly "never sat down face to face" with Pickrell to discuss his attitude toward the proposed changes. He added that the information he obatained about Pickrell's attitude "was hearsay," but did not reveal the sources or describe the nature of that information. Gill admitted, as well, that "most of the employees" felt "they had a good system" as it was, and "that there was no need to make any changes"; yet, not everyone of that persuasion was discharged.

No changes had been instituted as of February 22.

c. The discharges of Crowel and Thompson

Turnage called Thompson at home the morning of February 22, reporting that Gill wanted to meet with her, Crowel, and Woodward at 11 a.m., and asking that she pass the word to the other two.

Thompson was unable to locate Woodward, but she and Crowel appeared at Gill's office as directed. Gill told them that he had "thought it was going to work out, but it's just not working out"; and "after further consideration" he had "decided to terminate" them. With that, he handed each a termination notice and a final paycheck, said he "appreciate[d] all [their] help," and escorted them to the door.[9]

[8] Gill testified that the Regional Center informed him, in the same context, that it had contracted its oversight agency in Sacramento, which reported that no comparable facility in the State was organized. Gill was notably evasive when pressed by counsel for the General Counsel whether the Regional Center had voiced concern about a bad precedent. He answered, variously: "they were being very cautions"; "I'm not sure that's what they were saying"; "they would probably deny that they ever said it that was"; and "I sort of figured out what they were saying, yeah."

Both termination notices stated:

REASONS FOR ACTION

> After careful consideration and analysis, this management of our agency has decided to eliminate your job position.

Asked why he had decided to eliminate the program coordinator positions so soon after creating them, Gill testified that "a number of things" had happened, "the least of which was the unionization effort." He enlarged:

> [A]s I reevaluated the amount of money that was coming in, and the amount of expenses that I had, I became aware that there simply wasn't any way, despite how good an appointment it might have been clinically, to maintain the five supervisors [Turnage, Guiboa, and the three program coordinators], and that, regretfully, I had to make that decision, not on a clinical basis, but simply on a financial basis.[10]

Gill continued:

> I think if I could have afford[ed] it, they [the program coordinators] would have been of very big help to me, and it would have helped the program, no question about that in my mind.

d. The discharge of McMillian

As earlier mentioned, McMillian, a programmer, first worked for Respondent on February 16, having just returned from vacation. Also, as previously noted, Turnage told her on February 16 that she was "starting on the wrong foot by trying to get people to sign union cards at work," and that she "needed to be loyal to the Doc if [she] wished to work for" Respondent.

McMillian worked at Catalina under Turnage, on February 16. She had spent much of the preceding night on an airplane from the east coast, not expecting to work February 16, and was persuaded to work that day on little notice because of "an emergency."[11] Turnage, unimpressed with her performance, recommended during a scheduling meeting February 18 that she not be retained. Thompson and Crowel, citing the arduous plane ride, argued that she had not received a fair trial. Gill agreed, and Guiboa volunteered to "take her" at Rowland. Gill thereupon penciled in McMillian to work several of the remaining days in February, as well as March 3–5.[12]

McMillian worked full shifts at Rowland on February 20 and 21. She also worked on February 22 until about noon, when Guiboa handed her an envelope and told her to read the enclosed note. The note stated in relevant part:

> After reviewing our staffing needs we have concluded that we do not have a full-time position for you in our agency at this time. We appreciate your willingness to fill in at Catalina and Rowland House this past week.

After reading the note, McMillian exclamined: "You couldn't possibly be overstaffed. Why? What have I done?" Guiboa answered, "It's all in the envelope."

Gill testified that his position regarding McMillian is:

> . . . that we tried her out and looked at other offers that we had—we were trying to get an all-male staff at Rowland and we simply decided that, that there were other people who would be more appropriate for that position.

Gill appended that he did not "mean to imply that he fired McMillian "because she had done a poor job." Rather, he went on, he was "getting a lot of pressure from the Regional Center to try to use as many male staff as possible to deal with some difficult male clients," so he decided on February 21 "to try to go with a male staff" at Rowland.

The record contains no evidence that a male replacement for McMillian had been located or was in prospect at that time. Gill conceded that the procurement of a male staff "was difficult to do" and "took awhile."

e. The discharge of Woodward

Because of Thompson's inability to locate Woodward on February 22, Gill would have discharged him when he fired the other two program coordinators, Crowel and Thompson. Woodward's termination notice was identical to theirs, prepared by Gill at the same time.

Woodward received formal word the afternoon of February 23. Informed that morning by Pickrell about the other discharge, he called Respondent's office, and was told that a paycheck was "waiting for" him. He consequently went to the office that afternoon, where-

[9] This description of the encounter derives from the testimony of Crowel and Thompson. Gill testified that it "went pretty much as they described."

[10] Further, with regard to Respondent's economic circumstances, as newly perceived by Gill, he testified:

> I had had several meetings with licensing, I had become aware of the . . . extent that the deficiency had to be corrected, the extent that the findings that were being applied to TLC, in that effect, to [Responent], I had become aware of problems with the land, with the lease, I became aware that [Respondent] would have to pay rent for the burned-out building [a structure on the Catalina premises], and that the landlord didn't intend in any quick way to rebuild it. I became aware that at least two of the monies from at least two of the clients was going to be held up, and that's six thousand dollars a month. By then I had begun to make corrections on one of the homes and it had already cost close to eight thousand dollars to make the repairs and buy the additional furniture, and I could see that to bring all the other houses into compliance was going to be very expensive.

[11] The flight arrived at 2 a.m. McMillian received a call at 7 a.m. that she was needed at work.

[12] Gill assertedly decreed that "the fair thing to do before making a decision was to have her try out for three days." The schedule, which is in evidence, unambiguously establishes that McMillian's status was more permanent than that; however, as do her personnel records, which state that her hire date was "2/1/87," and a staffing sheet prepared by Respondent about February 1, which contains this entry: "Brenda McMillen [sic] (on leave)."

upon Gill gave him the termination notice and the same explanation he had given Crowel and Thompson. In addition, Gill assured Woodward that he had done "a really good job" and that Respondent would not cause him "any trouble" concerning unemployment benefits. Gill also raised Woodward's failure to work scheduled on February 21. Woodward responded, without elaboration, that "things had gotten a little too strange" at work the night before, prompting him to stay away.[13]

Gill testified that "it was [his] assumption that Woodward was quitting, because he didn't show up the [21]." Gill admitted, however, that Woodward never said he was quitting; that Woodward's position was being eliminated in any case; and that Gill had prepared the termination notice before hearing about the absence. Gill testified, as well, that the decision to terminate Woodward "had nothing to do with the quality of his work, it was simply a matter of there wasn't enough revenues generated to handle five supervisors."

Regarding Woodward's absence, Gill acknowledged that Respondent "had problems with people not showing up." The record suggests that employees generally were not assumed to have quit, nor were they discharged, when they failed to show up.

5. Gill's alleged February 24 misconduct

Long, the remaining alleged discriminatee, testified about a February 24 conversation with Gill in the staff office at Rowland, in which Gill said he had "heard rumors of a union starting," then told Long he would receive "a higher position and a higher raise" if he did not "go to any organization or be a part of any organization."

Gill did not speak of this in his testimony, nor was Long's account otherwise challenged.

6. The discharge of Long

Long, a programmer aide at Rowland, was discharged by Gill the morning of March 4. Long testified that Gill told him at the time that he was taking the action because Long was "out to sabotage the system and . . . did not want the program to work." Long responded, so he recounted, by asking if he could talk with Gill, anyway, about one of the facility administrators whom Long suspected of racial prejudice,[14] and Gill answered that he "only takes care of people that are loyal to him," and some of the employees were "out to stab him in the back." This account was not disputed by Gill. Long did not receive a written termination notice.

Gill testified that Long was fired

> . . . because on several occasions he didn't show up for work when assigned and we couldn't get in touch with him, and he was opposed to implementing the program the way I was trying to implement it. Ben had worked there before, had a notion of how the old program worked, was strongly committed to the old system. I felt I needed to make some changes, needed to implement the system that I was familiar with and that I could properly supervise. He was very open about his opposition, he was convinced that his way was proper, but he was opposed to my way, so I felt on that basis I had to make a change and get somebody in there who would work with me.

Gill continued:

> It had nothing to do with the quality of his work or how long he worked with the clients. I think he cared about the clients and I think he was firmly convinced that his way was correct and that he . . . was helping the clients.

Gill's affidavit, provided during the investigation of this matter, does not mention absenteeism as a reason for Long's discharge. Gill concededly never warned Long about absenteeism and, as earlier mentioned, Respondent "had problems with people not showing up."

B. Conclusions

1. Turnage's alleged February 16 and Gill's alleged February 24 misconduct

As noted, Respondent concedes in its brief that Turnage "probably did make the threats" attributed to her—namely, telling McMillian on February 16 that she was "starting on the wrong foot" by "trying to get people to sign union cards at work" and that she would have "to be loyal to the Doc if [she] wished to work for" Respondent.

With respect to Gill's alleged February 24 misconduct, Long's testimony was both uncontroverted and convincing that Gill told him, in the context of "rumors of a union starting," that he would receive a better job with higher pay by declining to participate.

The remarks of both violated Section 8(a)(1) as alleged; Turnage's by linking job security and Gill's by linking a better job and higher pay to abstention from union activities.

2. The allegedly unlawful discharges

a. Controlling principles

The Board stated in Wright Line:

[W]e shall henceforth employ the following causation test in all cases alleging violation of Section 8(a)(3) or violations of Section 8(a)(1) turning on employer motivation. First, we shall require that the General Counsel make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a "motivating factor" in the employer's decision. Once this is established, the burden will shift to the employer to demonstrate that the [13] Woodward testified that he had worked "a good deal of" the night of February 20, although not scheduled to do so, because of an emergency; that about midnight someone, presumably Turnage, instructed a new employee to escort Woodward off the premises; and that, as a result, Woodward "was absolutely disgusted" and chose not to report on February 21.

[14] Long is black.

same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct.[15]

b. The five discharges of February 22 and 23

I conclude that the General Counsel has made the requisite prima facie showing that the five discharges of February 22 and 23 were in unlawful retribution for the discharged employees' union activites and the Union's attendant filing on February 20 of a petition for election. The bases for this conclusion are:

(a) Each of the five dischargees was conspicuously prounion. All signed cards; all espoused unionization to coworkers; Crowel, Thompson, and Woodward participated in the seminal conversation on February 4; Thompson made the initial contact with the Union; McMillian was unlawfully rebuked by Turnage on February 16 about "trying to get people to sign union cards at work"; and Thompson told Gill on February 18 that she "was the one that started the union drive."[16]

(b) All the termination notices were dated February 22, four of the discharges occurred that day, and the fifth occurred a day later only because Woodward was unavailable on February 22. This contiguity indicates a common motive or trigger.

(c) That the petition was the common trigger is suggested by the temporal proximity between its filing and the discharges; by Gill's deep distress over the petition (and, by extension, the underlying union activity), as shown by his consequent declaration to TLC President Katz that he was rescinding their contract;[17] and by the haste of the discharge decisions implicit in Gill's memorandum of February 22.

(d) Union sympathies aside, each of the dischargees was at least an acceptable employee. Thus, Gill testified that the three program coordinators "would have been of very big help" if retained; that he did not "mean to imply" that he fired McMillian "because she had done a poor job"; and that Pickrell "worked well with the clients and implemented the existing program." This acceptability, in combination with Respondent's shorthandedness and the desirability of retaining as many as possible of the existing staff to preserve the continuity of staff-client relationships, further indicates that the petition was the trigger.

(e) The issuance of termination notices, at variance with Respondent's usual practice, betrays its perception that the discharges needed special cosmetic treatment to survive scrutiny.

I additionally conclude that Respondent has failed to overcome the General Counsel's prima facie showing. My reasons are:

(a) Gill's testimony that he terminated the three program coordinators "not on a clinical basis, but simply on a financial basis," was not convincing. Not only was his demeanor in the telling unpersuasive, but his recital was nebulous, lacked testimonial or documentary corroboration, and failed to explain with plausibility how the economic plight so forecefully captured his attention roughly coincident with the filing of the petition.

(b) Gill's testimony about Pickrell—that he was discharged mainly because he "was opposed to the changes that [Gill] was trying to make"—likewise was unconvincing. Again, his testimonial demeanor was unimpressive, and his professed bases for faulting Pickrell's attitude were vague and uncorroborated. Beyond that, Gill's admission that "most of the employees" saw no need to make any changes," yet were not fired, leaves little doubt that his concerns about Pickrell's attitude were but veiled—and incriminating—references to his prounion sentiments.

Incriminating, as well, was Gill's testimony that "one of the coonsiderations" behind Pickrell's discharge was a concern that, because of his romantic link with Crowel, he "might cause problems" after her termination. The illegality of Crowel's discharge thus necessarily attaches to Pickrell's.

Finally, the reason stated on Pickrell's termination notice—that his "performance [was] not satisfactory"—does not correspond with Gill's testimony, a circumstance impeaching both.

(c) Gill's testimony regarding McMillian's discharge suffered much the same deficiencies of demeanor and content as that just discussed. His statement that he had been "getting a lot of pressure from the Regional Center to try to use as many male staff as possible" was neither persuasively presented nor corroborated; and, even if true, does not explain the timing of the discharge decision, the day after the petition was filed, given that a male replacement evidently had not been located and that Respondent was seriously understaffed.

(d) As previously noted,[18] Gill's testimony that he learned of the union activity on February 20, when told about the petition, came across as contrived to convey the notion that at least some of the discharge decisions had been made before he came into knowledge. His testimony that he told Respondent's lawyers on February 21 that the petition put him in "an awkward position" inasmuch as he had "made some decisions about staffing changes" and did not want them to appear union-related, bore that same aura of contrivance. Apart from the sundry chinks in Respondent's defenses elsewhere noted, those defenses were grievously compromised by Gill's perceived need to dissemble in this fashion.

[15] 251 NLRB 1083, 1089 (1980). This formulation received Supreme Court approval in NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983).

[16] Thompson and McMillian, both with convincing demeanor, are credited that Thompson made this remark to Gill. Gill denied it only by implication, testifying that he learned about the union activity when told about the petition. That testimony came across as contrived, to convey the notion that at least some of the discharge decisions were made before Gill came into knowledge, and is not credited.

[17] Gill's distress doubtless was reinforced, moreover, by the Regional Center's intimations that unionization would be a "bad precedent." Substantial union animus also was revealed by Turnage's unlawful February 16 comments to McMillian and Gill's unlawful February 24 words to Long.

[18] See fn. 16, supra.

c. The discharge of Long

I conclude that the General Counsel also has made a prima facie showing that the March 4 discharge of Long was unlawful. Thus:

(a) Long was actively prounion, and Gill evinced his awareness of that on February 24 by targeting Long for a better job and higher pay if he refrained from union activity.

(b) By Gill's admission, the discharge "had nothing to do with the quality of [long's] work."

(c) Gill told Long in the conversation attendant the discharge that Long was "out to sabotage the system," that some of the employees were "out to stab him in the back," and that he "only takes care of people that are loyal to him."[19] In all the circumstances, including the continuing pendency of the election, the inference is unavoidable that Gill was alluding, at least in substantial part, to Long's prounion sentiments and activities and those of his coworkers.

(d) As revealed by Gill's earlier unlawful discharge of five employees, the extreme sanction of discharge was central to his union-fighting philosophy.

I further conclude that Respondent has not overcome the prima facie showing, Gill's testimonial demeanor once more was less than compelling, and his stated grounds for the discharge—that Long had not shown up for work "on several occasions" and "was opposed to implementing the [new] program"—again were wanting in specificity and corroboration. Yet worse, Gill's failure to cite Long's absenteeism in his affidavit, coupled with his admission that absenteeism was not unique to Long and that he had never warned Long about it, warrants the surmise that this reason was of after-the-fact conjuration; and his mention of Long's resistance to the new program fairly can be construed, as in Pickrell's case, as a coded reference to Long's union sympathies.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discharging Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, and Gwenndolynn Thompson on February 22, 1987, by discharging Vincente Woodward on February 23, 1987, and by discharging Benjamin Long on March 4, 1987.

2. Respondent additionally violated Section 8(a)(1) on February 16, 1987, when Jean Turnage told McMillian that she was "starting on the wrong foot" by "trying to get people to sign union cards at work," and that she would have "to be loyal to the Doc if [she] wished to work for" Respondent; and on February 24, 1987, when Gary Gill said to Long, in the context of "rumors of a union starting," that he would receive a better job, with higher pay, by declining to participate.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[20]

ORDER

The Respondent, Southern California Developmental Health Services, Inc., Camarillo, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening employees with loss of jobs, or promising them better jobs and higher pay, to discourage them from engaging in activities on behalf of Teamsters Union Local No. 186, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO or any other labor organization.

(b) Discharging employees for engaging in activities in support of any labor organization.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

(a) Make Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long whole, with interest where appropriate, for any losses of wages or benefits suffered as a consequence of Respondent's unlawful terminations of them in February and March 1987.[21]

(b) If reasonable in all the circumstances,[22] offer to Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long immediate and full reinstatement their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges.

(c) Expunge from the employment records of Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long any reference to their terminations; and notify them in writing that this has been done and that their terminations will not in any way serve as a basis for future personnel or disciplinary action affecting them.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Mail copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix"[23] to all employees who worked in any of the five [19] Long's uncontroverted testimony in these particulars is credited.

[20] All outstanding motions inconsistent with this recommended Order are denied. If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[21] In accordance with our decision in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987), interest on and after January 1, 1987, shall be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621. Interest on amounts accrued prior to January 1, 1987 (the effective date of the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621), shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[22] As determined in the compliance phase of this proceeding.

[23] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

homes managed by Respondent in Camarillo, California, at any time from February 20 through March 21, 1987. Copies of the notice, to be provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, shall be signed by Respondent's authorized representatives and then promptly mailed by Respondent to the employees at their last known addresses.[24]

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[24] In light of the apparent impossibility of meaningful posting, mailing is necessary to ensure adequate dissemination of this Order.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POST BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with loss or jobs, or promise them better jobs and higher pay, to discourage them from engaging in activities on behalf of Teamsters Union Local No. 186, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT discharge employees for engaging in activities in support of any labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long whole, with interest where appropriate, for any losses of wages or benefits suffered as a consequence of our unlawful terminations of them in February and March 1987.

WE WILL, if reasonable in all the circumstances as determined by the NLRB, offer to Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges.

WE WILL expunge from the employment records of Lesi Crowel, Brenda McMillian, Bruce Pickrell, Gwenndolynn Thompson, Vincente Woodward, and Benjamin Long any reference to their terminations; and WE WILL notify them in writing that this has been done and that their terminations will not in any way serve as a basis for future personnel or disciplinary action affecting them.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DEVELOPMENTAL HEALTH SERVICES, INC.

Property Management Services Corporation d/b/a PMS Corporation and Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Local 355, AFL–CIO,[1] Hotel & Restaurant Employees' and Bartenders' International Union, AFL–CIO and Mar Del Plata Condominium Association, Inc., Party in Interest. Case 12–CA–10621

August 17, 1988

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 5, 1987, the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order[2] in which the Board, inter alia, ordered the Respondent and Mar del Plata Condominium Association, Inc. (Mar del Plata) to make whole bargaining unit employees for any loss of pay suffered as a result of their unlawful terminations and the subcontracting of unit work. Mar del Plata fulfilled its obligation to make the employees whole by settling the case and paying its portion of the net backpay due.

On November 24, 1987, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit entered its judgment enforcing the Board's Order concerning the Respondent.[3] A controversy having arisen over the amount of backpay due from the Respondent under the Board's Order, as enforced by the court, the Acting Regional Director for Region 12, on April 29, 1988, issued a backpay specification and notice of hearing, alleging the amount of backpay due from the Respondent and notifying the Respondent that it should file a timely answer complying with the Board's Rules and Regulations.[4]

The Respondent did not file an answer to the backpay specification. On May 17, 1988, the Regional Director wrote to counsel for the Respondent and informed it of the need to file an answer by May 20, 1988, or face a possible summary judgment order. A copy of the Board's Rules governing the filing of an answer was mailed to the Respondent's counsel on that date.

On May 26, 1988, the compliance officer for Region 12 telephoned the Respondent's president and informed him that he had failed to file an answer to the backpay specification. The Respondent's president stated that he did not intend to file an answer. The compliance officer said that if an answer was not received by June 1, 1988, a Motion for Summary Judgment would be filed with the Board. The compliance officer also wrote the Respondent's president on May 26, confirming the substance of that day's telephone conversation.

On June 27, 1988, the General Counsel filed a Motion for Summary Judgment.[5] On June 29, 1988, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Respondent did not file a response. The allegations in the motion are therefore undisputed.

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.54 of the Board's Rules and Regulations provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> (a) . . . The respondent shall, within 21 days from the service of the specification, if any, file an answer thereto. . . .
>
> (c) . . . If the respondent fails to file any answer to the specification within the time prescribed by this section, the Board may, either with or without taking evidence in support of the allegations of the specification and without notice to the respondent, find the specification to be true and enter such order as may be appropriate. . . .

The backpay specification states that the Respondent shall, within 21 days from the date of the specification, file with the Regional Director for Region 12 an answer to the specification. The backpay specification further states that if the answer fails to deny the allegations of the specification in the manner required under the Board's Rules and Regulations, and the failure to do so is not adequately explained, the allegations shall be deemed to be true and the Respondent shall be precluded from introducing evidence controverting them.

In addition to the backpay specification and notice of hearing, counsel for the General Counsel notified the Respondent of its failure to file an answer and that the General Counsel intended to seek summary judgment if no answer was filed.

The Respondent has not filed an answer nor offered any explanation for its failure to do so. In accordance with the rules set forth above, the allegations in the backpay specification are deemed to be admitted as true and the Board so finds.

---

[1] Formerly, Hotel, Motel, Restaurant and Hi-Rise Employees and Bartenders Union, Local 355.

[2] Mar del Plata Condominium Assn., 282 NLRB 1012 (1987).

[3] No. 87-5881, enfd. mem. (Nov. 24, 1987).

[4] The backpay specification was mailed to the Respondent by certified mail, return receipt requested. The Respondent admits receiving the backpay specification.

[5] Counsel for the General Counsel states in his Motion for Summary Judgment that the compliance officer wrote and telephoned the Respondent's attorney on May 26, 1988. Exhs. D and E to that motion indicate that the compliance officer communicated with the Respondent's president and sole shareholder on this date.

Accordingly, the Board grants the Motion for Summary Judgment and concludes that the amount due each of the bargaining unit employees is as stated in the backpay specification. The Board orders that payment to each bargaining unit employee be made by the Respondent as set forth in the backpay specification.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Property Management Services Corporation d/b/a PMS Corporation, Miami Beach, Florida, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall make whole its bargaining unit employees by payment to them of the respective amounts stated in the backpay specification, plus interest to be computed in the manner prescribed in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987), less tax withholdings required by Federal and state laws.

Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation and International Guards Union of America, Local 66. Case 27–CA–10116

August 19, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 3, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Michael D. Stevenson issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs, and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation, Boulder, Colorado, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] We agree with the judge that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union since April 23, 1987. In doing so, we do not rely on the judge's finding that the Respondent demonstrated a lack of good faith by failing to arrange for bargaining to begin following the termination of bargaining in the ATM unit on March 27, 1986. On December 23, 1985, the Respondent agreed, at the Union's request, to defer bargaining until after the ATM negotiations had terminated. There was no discussion at that time about which party would be responsible for initiating bargaining following the ATM negotiations. Under the circumstances, we do not believe that the Respondent's failure to take the initiative and affirmatively request bargaining after the termination of the ATM negotiations indicates a lack of good faith.

Michael D. Pennington, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Tom Franklin, Esq., of Atlanta, Georgia, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MICHAEL D. STEVENSON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried before me at Denver, Colorado, on 22 October 1987,[1] pursuant to a complaint issued by the Regional Director for Region 27 of the National Labor Relations Board on 26 June 1987, and which is based on a charge filed by International Guards Union of America, Local 66 (the Union) on 20 May 1987. The complaint alleges that Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation (Respondent) has engaged in certain violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act).

[1] All dates herein refer to 1986 unless otherwise indicated.

Issue

Whether Respondent has violated the Act by failing and refusing to recognize, to meet with, and to bargain collectively in good faith with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the relevant unit.

All parties were given full opportunity to participate, to introduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to file briefs. Briefs, which have been carefully considered, were filed on behalf of the General Counsel and Respondent.

On the entire record of the case, and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. RESPONDENT'S BUSINESS

Respondent admits that it is a Delaware corporation with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, engaged in the business of providing armored car services involving the pickup and delivery of valuables, including cash, checks, and documents from commercial customers and financial institutions, and having an office and place of business located in Boulder, Colorado. It further admits that during the past year, in the course and conduct of its business, it annually provided services valued in excess of $50,000 to other enterprises within the State of Colorado that are directly engaged in interstate commerce and derive income in excess of $50,000 from its Colorado business operations. Accordingly, it admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondent admits, and I find, that International Guards Union of America, Local 66 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts [2]

During all times material to this case, the Union represented three separate units of Respondent's employees: (1) a statewide unit of automated teller machine (ATM) technicians and dispatchers certified by the Board on 7 November 1985 and consisting of approximately 30 employees (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 1); (2) a Boulder, Colorado unit of full-time and regular part-time guards, certified by the Board on 19 November 1985 and consisting of between five to seven employees; and (3) a Denver, Colorado unit of guard employees consisting of approximately 70 employees (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 7). The issue in this case concerns primarily the Boulder unit of guards.

On 17 December 1985, the Union's then attorney sent the following letter to Respondent's attorney and chief negotiator:

[2] Many important facts are contained in a "Stipulation of Facts" (G.C. Exh. 7).

December 17, 1985

Mr. Tom Franklin
Assistant Vice President
Labor Relations, Wells
Fargo Armoured [sic] Service Corp.
Post Office Box 4313
Atlanta, Georgia 30302

Re: Wells Fargo Armoured [sic] Service Corp. & International Guards Union of America, Local No. 66 NLRB Case No. 27 RC 6572

Dear Mr. Franklin:

On November 19, 1985 the National Labor Relations Board certified the International Guards Union of America, Local No. 66 as the exclusive representative for purposes of collective bargaining of all full time and regular part time guard employees employed by Wells Fargo at its Boulder, Colorado location. Pursuant to that certification, please consider this letter a demand that Wells Fargo meet and negotiate with IGUA-66 for the purpose of entering into a collective-bargaining agreement. Please inform me when your bargaining representatives can meet with the union for this purpose or contact me so that we can schedule a meeting.

In addition, since IGUA-66 now represents these employees I request that you send me a list of the names, addresses and telephone numbers of all guards in Boulder that were not in the Excelsior list provided to the union prior to the election.

Very truly yours,
/s/ Kristin A. Kutz
Kristin A. Kutz

KAK/ps
cc: Paul Lynes
opeiu-5
afl–cio

[G.C. Exh. 2]

On 23 December 1985, the parties began negotiations for the ATM unit described above. Franklin represented Respondent at this and subsequent meetings while Kutz represented the Union at this meeting, but not at subsequent meetings.

One of the other persons in attendance on 23 December 1985 was Paul Lynes, president of the Union for a 6-year period of time ending in May. Lynes testified at hearing that Respondent never made a written reply to the 17 December letter published above (G.C. Exh. 2). Whether Franklin and Kutz had a conversation about the General Counsel's Exhibit 2, Lynes was not aware of any such conversation.

On the question of a conversation between Franklin and Kutz, Franklin himself testified at hearing, although he was also representing Respondent at hearing.[3] Licensed to practice law in the States of Missouri and North Carolina, Franklin is Respondent's chief spokesman at negotiations with labor unions. He testified that in the course of negotiations on 23 December 1985, he acknowledged to Kutz that he had received her 17 December letter and further told her that Respondent was ready and willing to negotiate, but would require separate meetings on separate days to negotiate for the ATM unit and for the Boulder unit. To this Kutz responded that she desired to finish the ATM negotiations first, and Franklin agreed.

On cross-examination, Franklin admitted telling the General Counsel before the hearing began that while he was certain of his conversation with Kutz, he was not certain at which of the ATM negotiating sessions the conversation had occurred. Franklin also admitted that he did not make the General Counsel aware that Franklin intended to be a witness. Finally, Franklin admitted that while he kept his own notes during the negotiating sessions, his notes for 23 December do not reflect the conversation with Kutz.[4]

After 23 December 1985, the parties met again during 1986 with respect to ATM negotiations on 16 and 17 January, 20 and 21 February, and 7 and 27 March (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 2). During the 1986 ATM negotiations, Kutz was replaced by Attorney Dennis Valentine of her law firm (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 3). The ATM unit employees went on strike on 23 February and made an unconditional offer to return to work on 12 March. No ATM agreement was ever reached and negotiations were discontinued on or about 27 March (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 4)[5]

Regarding the Denver guard unit, Respondent gave written notice, on 25 August, of its desire to negotiate changes in the existing collective-bargaining agreement. Negotiations began on 3 November, and continued until 20 January 1987 with the signing of a new agreement (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 5).

On 27 February 1987, Attorney Goldhammer, who represented the Union during the Denver guard unit negotiations referred to above, sent a letter to Respondent on behalf of the Boulder guard unit. It reads as follows:

February 27, 1987

Mr. Thomas P.G. Franklin
Wells Fargo Armored Service Corp.
Post Office Box 4313
Atlanta, Georgia 30302

[3] In permitting such testimony by advocates, the Board has held that it is not the Board's function or responsibility to pass on the ethical propriety of a decision by counsel to testify in an NLRB hearing. Where the testimony is otherwise proper and competent, it should be admitted into evidence. Operating Engineers Local 9 (Fountain Sand & Gravel Co.), 210 NLRB 129 fn. 1 (1974).

[4] Although taken by surprise by Franklin's testimony, the General Counsel never requested a continuance to bring in Kutz as a witness. No reason was suggested for Kutz' absence, although she is apparently a practicing attorney in Denver. In light of this, I credit Franklin's testimony despite my misgivings caused by Franklin's failure to mention the conversation with Kutz in his "position paper" (G.C. Exh. 8) submitted to the Board and in other correspondence received into evidence, all of which documents are described below.

[5] On or about 14 June, Lynes had a conversation with a man named Williams, ATM union representative on the negotiating committee. Lynes stated it was no longer in the Union's best interest nor in the ATM unit's best interest for the Union to continue to represent the ATM employees. The record does not show whether the relationship was formally terminated.

Re: Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation and International Guards Union of America, Local 66 NLRB Case No. 27-RC-6572

Dear Tom:

On December 17, 1985 Kristin Kutz of my firm wrote you a letter demanding that Wells Fargo meet and negotiate with IGUA 66 for the purpose of entering into a collective bargaining agreement for the Boulder, Colorado Wells Fargo armored guards.

Apparently, since that time, the parties have been involved with numerous other matters and negotiations have never begun regarding Boulder employees. However, at this time the union hereby renews its request with the company to bargain in behalf of the Boulder armored employees.

Please contact me at your earliest convenience and let me know when you have times and dates available for this bargaining. Thank you very much.

Very truly yours,
/s/Joseph M. Goldhammer
Joseph M. Goldhammmer

JMG/ps
cc: Paul Lynes
opeiu-5
afl-cio

[G.C. Exh. 3]

On 23 April 1987, Franklin answered with a letter of his own:

23 April 1987

Joseph Goldhammer
1563 Gaylord Street
Denver, CO 80206

Dear Joe:

I have reviewed the Boulder situation. The Company's position in this matter is simple. The National Labor Relations Board certified Local 66 of the International Guards Union of America to represent the Boulder Colorado employees on 19 November 1985. The parties never met to do any negotiating. In fact the only contact the Company had from Local 66 was the December 17, 1985 letter from Christine Koutz [sic]. There has been no attempt by the union to represent these employees since December 17, 1985.

It is our position that the one year presumption of certification has in fact expired and that Local 66 no longer legitimately represents the Boulder employees. The Company will therefore not meet to negotiate concerning these employees.

Sincerely,
/s/ Tom
Thomas P. G. Franklin
Assistant Vice President
Labor Relations

TPGF/jls

[G.C. Exh. 4]

On 6 May 1987, Goldhammer sent a final letter to Franklin, that is, final on terms of the evidence offered at the hearing. It reads as follows:

May 6, 1987

Mr. Thomas P. G. Franklin
Assistant Vice President
Labor Relations
Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation
P.O. Box 4313
Atlanta, Georgia 30302

Dear Tom:

I am in receipt of your letter of April 23, 1987 regarding the Boulder situation.

This letter is to inform you that we have confidential authorization forms from a majority of the present members of the Boulder bargaining unit. Therefore, even though you may wish to obtain objective evidence to try to rebut the presumption after the one-year certification period has elapsed that the union still represents the members of the bargaining unit, I have evidence which will overcome any such objective evidence.

I would disclose the confidential cards to you only upon the assurance that you would continue to recognize and bargain with the union if I produced that sufficient number of authentic authorization cards. If you cannot provide that assurance, then I will be forced to file unfair labor practices charges for refusal to bargain. Therefore, I would like to know from you whether such disclosure would make any difference in your decision not to bargain with the union. Please respond to this inquiry within ten days. If no response is received within that period of time, I will assume that the cards will make no difference and I will proceed to file unfair labor practice charges.

Thank you very much.

Very truly yours,
/s/ Joseph M. Goldhammer
Joseph M. Goldhammer

JMG: tn
cc: Paul Lynes
opeiu 5
afl-cio

[G.C. Exh. 5)

While Franklin apparently did not reply to Goldhammer's letter of 6 May 1987, Franklin did send on 9 June 1987 a "position paper" to an agent of the NLRB which reads as follows:[6]

[6] The Board directs that so-called position papers of parties sent to the Board should be admitted into evidence, if the substance is material. Mastillon Hospital Assn., 282 NLRB 675 fn. 5 (1987).

June 9, 1987
Wayne L. Benson
National Labor Relations Board
Region 27
260 New Custom House
721 19th Street
Denver, Colorado 80202

Re: Case No. 27–CA–10116

Dear Sir:

I have recently received the amended charge in this case and now have a better understanding as to the basis for the charge. I will attempt to express the employer's positions through this letter.

Local 66 of the International Guards Union of America was certified as a representative of all full time and all regular part time guard employees employed by the employer at its Boulder, Colorado location in case 27–RC–6572 which was dated 19 December 1985. I did receive a letter on February 27, 1987 from Joseph Goldhammer stating that the union wished to negotiate relating to the Boulder employees. I responded to that letter on April 23, 1987 but since the union had not "pressed its demand to enter into bargaining for this unit until February 27, 1987" (as stated in letter from Wayne L. Benson to Tom Franklin dated May 27, 1987) Wells Fargo had no obligation to bargain with Local 66.

It is the Company's contention that the National Labor Relations Board uses a reasonable standard as to the length of time a certification is deemed to be valid. The usual length of time is generally considered to be one year. In this particular case fifteen months have passed since the union "pressed" its right to bargin with Wells Fargo. It is Wells Fargo's position that the one year certification period has run and that the union does not still represent those employees.

It is Wells Fargo's position that at this time the most appropriate remedy would be for the union to get cards signed and press for a new election for those employees.

If you need any further information please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,
/s/ Thomas Franklin
Thomas P. G. Franklin
Assistant Vice President
Labor Relations

TPGF:jls

[G.C. Exh. 8]

Returning to the testimony of Lynes, I note his testimony on cross-examination with respect to an important issue in this case. I quote directly from the transcript (Tr. 19–20):

> Q. Was there anything in between the [sic] 27 March, 1986 and 3 November, 1986 that was happening that hasn't been brought out here that would have prevented the union from requesting bargaining with the company?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. Would you tell us what that is?
>
> A. Well, I had hip surgery during the negotiations with ATM, and I had rehabilitation. My wife's blind. I have—every time she needs to go anywhere I have to haul her. She has no way getting around. And we had a lot of changes in management, had a lot of grievances. I'm out of town three days a week, so it don't give me much time to get around, you know, get everything done that I want to get done. And through all the problems at the local—at that time I was on the executive board with the international. Had problems with them I had to answer to. Just too many items to keep up with. So between everything happening, time got away from me.
>
> Q. Just one last question, Mr. Lynes. To your knowledge on behalf of both yourself as president and as the officer agent of the union, are you aware at any time that Wells Fargo refused to bargain with you, your union, or your agents regarding Boulder employees?
>
> A. We never did get an answer from Wells Fargo saying they wanted to bargain or give a date.
>
> Q. Other than that, did anybody from Wells Fargo ever tell you or your agents or union that we will not bargain with you? We refused to bargain?
>
> A. Not personally, no.
>
> Q. What about anybody else in the union or your attorneys?
>
> A. Not that I know of.
>
> Q. Thank you.

On redirect examination, the General Counsel continued in the same vein. Again, I quote from the transcript (Tr. 20–21):

> Q. Mr Lynes, you just answered a question about what was going on to prevent you from requesting bargaining between ATM negotiations and the Denver guard unit negotiations. Could you describe for us the financial status of the union during that period of time? Especially right after the ATM negotiations ended.
>
> A. Yes. The financial status of Local 66, right after the ATM, was in bad shape. We had about $1,500 in the treasury and we owed over $10,000 in lawyers fees.
>
> Q. What were these lawyer fees for?
>
> A. For ATM, negotiating the ATM contract and the Colorado Springs contract, and had Vail. Union business.
>
> MR. PENNINGTON: I have no further questions.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Do the facts and circumstances of this case establish Respondent's good-faith doubt of the Union's majority status

I begin with relevant rules of law stated in Buckley Broadcasting Corp., 284 NLRB 1339, 1340 (1987):

> Absent unusual circumstances, there is an irrebuttable presumption that a union enjoys majority status during the first year following its certification.[3] On expiration of the certification year, the presumption of majority status continues but may be rebutted.[4] An employer who wishes to withdraw recognition after a year may do so in one of two ways: (1) by showing that on the date recognition was withdrawn the union did not in fact enjoy majority status, or (2) by presenting evidence of a sufficient objective basis for a reasonable doubt of the union's majority status at the time the employer refused to bargain.[5]
>
> The presumption of continuing majority status serves two important functions: first, it promotes continuity in bargaining relationships, i.e., gives the relationship "some measure of permanence,"[6] and, second, the presumption protects the express statutory right of employees to designate a collective-bargaining representative of their own choosing, and prevents an employer from impairing that right without objective evidence that the representative the employees have designated no longer enjoys majority support.[7]

[3] Ray Brooks v. NLRB, 348 U.S. 96, 98–104 (1954).

[4] Celanese Corp. of America, 95 NLRB 664 (1951), cited with approval in Ray Brooks, supra.

[5] Retired Persons Pharmacy v. NLRB, 519 F.2d 486 (2d Cir. 1975), enfg. 210 NLRB 443 (1974); Allied Industrial Workers Local 289 v. NLRB, 476 F.2d 868 (D.C. Cir. 1973), enfg. 192 NLRB 290 (1971); Terrell Machine Co. v. NLRB, 427 F.2d 1088 (4th Cir. 1970), enfg. 173 NLRB 1480 (1969).

[6] NLRB v. Century Oxford Mfg. Corp., 140 F.2d 541, 542 (2d Cir. 1944), enfg. 47 NLRB 835 (1943). Chairman Dotson acknowledges the importance of continuity in bargaining relationships, but he does not necessarily accord it absolute supremacy in all contexts. See his and former Member Dennis' joint dissent in Gibbs & Cox, 280 NLRB 953 (1986) (withdrawal of recognition in a separately recognized unit that was assertedly "merged" into a larger overall unit).

[7] Pennco, Inc., 250 NLRB 716 (1980), enfd. 684 F.2d 340 (6th Cir.), cert. denied 459 U.S. 994 (1982). See also Fall River Dyeing & Finishing Corp. v. NLRB, 107 S. Ct. 2225 (1987).

There are no "unusual circumstances" present in the instant case that might constitute an exception to the above rules. See United Supermarkets, 287 NLRB 119 (1987).

Any attempt to establish a reasonable doubt of the Union's majority status must be asserted in good faith, based on objective considerations, and raised in a context free of employer unfair labor practices. Lockheed Engineering & Management Services, 271 NLRB 119, 124 (1984).

Each side appears to acknowledge the vitality of the Board rules recited above. Within the framework of the cited rules, Respondent contends (Br. 3) that because the Union sat idle during the presumed certification year and beyond, Respondent can reasonably doubt that the Union represented a majority of Respondent's employees. At page 5 of its brief, Respondent elaborates on its basic argument, contending that this inactivity by the Union is tantamount to abandonment of the units, which again leads Respondent to a good-faith doubt. If Respondent is correct, it is free to withdraw recognition and to refuse to bargain with the Union without fear of violating the Act. To determine whether Respondent is correct, I turn to the record.

The Boulder guard unit was certified by the Board on 19 November 1985. Under Board law, Respondent may not claim lack of majority status for the first year. Thereafter, Respondent is permitted to marshall its evidence to rebut the presumption of continuing majority support. Essentially, Respondent's evidence is that the Union remained inactive insofar as the Boulder guard unit is concerned until 27 February 1987 when Goldhammer wrote the letter recited in section A, infra (G.C. Exh. 3).

If the Goldhammer letter of 27 February 1987 is the terminal point of our inquiry, the beginning point is the Kutz letter to Franklin of 17 December 1985, also recited section A, "Facts" infra (G.C. Exh. 2). This letter is a valid and timely request to bargain. Yolo Transport, 286 NLRB 1087 fn. 2 (1987). Again as noted in section A, infra, Respondent acknowledges receipt of the bargaining demand and then agreed with union counsel to defer bargaining for the Boulder guard unit until the ATM bargaining was completed. The ATM negotiations terminated on 27 March (G.C. Exh. 7, par. 2). Arguably, Respondent was legally obligated at this time to respond to the Union's 17 December 1985 letter as Franklin and Kutz had previously agreed.[7]

In light of the above analysis, I find that Respondent is barred from challenging the Union's majority status by a lack of good faith. First, I adopt the General Counsel's argument (G.C. Br. 8–10) that during most of the allegedly inactive period, the Union was negotiating with Respondent with respect to either the ATM or Denver units. Nothing in those activities demonstrates an inactive or uncaring labor organization with respect to the Boulder unit.

Respondent's lack of good faith is evident for a second reason. Subsequent to 27 March, Respondent was under a continuing duty to bargain because the Union's request for bargaining continued in effect. Dardanell Enterprises, 250 NLRB 377, 379 (1980), affd. mem. 676 F.2d 687 (3d Cir. 1982). Cf. Fall River Dyeing Corp. v. NLRB, 482 U.S. 27 (1987); Ambulette Transportation Services Corp., 287 NLRB 224, 228 (1987); Respondent's failure to bargain at a time Franklin had agreed, or at a minimum, to arrange for its obligation to be continued again, shows lack of good faith.

[7] I accept the General Counsel's unchallenged theory of its case, expressed in par. 9 of the complaint, that dates an alleged violation of the Act from 23 April 1987. This theory successfully avoids any statute of limitations issue, and I note that none was pleaded nor litigated. Accordingly, I need not consider whether in light of Franklin's credited testimony any violation of the Act occurred shortly after 27 March, when the ATM negotiations were concluded. However, I note, the General Counsel's argument in its brief (Br. 13), assuming Franklin is credited, "the Respondent's obligation to respond to the Union's request to bargain was triggered when the ATM negotiations ceased."

In the alternative, as a matter of substantive law, I find that Respondent has not met its burden to show sufficient evidence establishing a good-faith doubt. Assuming, without finding, that mere union inactivity for several months, without additional factors, can lead to a showing of abandonment of the unit, which in turn can be the basis for an employer's reasonable doubt of the union's majority status, I find a lack of evidence to establish that the Union abandoned the Boulder guard unit, or that Respondent reasonably believed it did.

In Bio-Medical Application of New Orleans, 233 NLRB 1467 (1977), the Board noted:

> . . . unlike the Administrative Law Judge, we cannot reasonably find that had the Union failed to contact Respondent during [a 6-week period of time], this in itself would be sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the Union had abandoned interest in representing Respondent's employees.

The Board also noted the absence of a decertification petition as further evidence showing no abandonment. (No decertification petition exists in the present case.) See also Imperial House Condominium, 279 NLRB 1225, 1233 (1986); Bay Area Sealers, 251 NLRB 89, 113–115, affd. 665 F.2d 971 (9th Cir. 1982); and All Brand Printing Corp., 236 NLRB 140, 147–148 (1978). (Union representative failed to visit plant for a 3-year period because union had agreed with respondent that negotiations would not begin until 60 days after bankruptcy order confirming plan of arrangement for settlement of debts.)

In Pioneer Inn Associates v. NLRB, 578 F.2d 835, 839–840 (9th Cir. 1978), the court noted that "a union's inactivity, particularly in failing to monitor contract provisions and pursue grievances is a factor to be considered in arriving at a reasonable good faith doubt." (Emphasis added.) In that case, the Union did not attempt to negotiate a new contract until 3 years after expiration of the prior agreement. The Union also ceased monitoring compliance with the contract for a period of 2 or 3 years. However, in at least one case, the Union prosecuted a grievance and no showing was made that any other grievance was ignored. Finally, in enforcing the Board's Order, the court noted "the Board properly considered it suspicious that the company failed to assert inactivity as a reason for doubt of majority status until after the Union had resumed an active role." NLRB v. King Radio Corp., 510 F.2d 1154, 1156–1157 (10th Cir. 1975), cert. denied 423 U.S. 839 (1975).

In this case, considering Respondent's evidence in its best light, I find virtually no evidence to support Respondent's claim that it had a reasonable doubt of the Union's majority status. To the extent there is a showing of some union inactivity here, this is only a factor to be weighed with other evidence such as the Union's original demand for bargaining, the Franklin-Kutz agreement to defer bargaining, and the Union's involvement with Respondent's Denver guard unit. I therefore reject Respondent's claim that it had a reasonable doubt of the Union's majority status. I further find, as alleged, that since on or about 23 April 1987, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.[8]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. International Guards Union of America, Local 66 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. At all times material, the Union has been and is the exclusive representative of all full-time and regular part-time guard employees employed by the Respondent at its Boulder, Colorado location, but excluding all office clerical employees and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. By refusing to recognize, meet with, and bargain collectively with the Union, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, I shall recommend to the Board that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist and that it take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. I shall also recommend to the Board that Respondent be ordered to recognize and bargain, on request, with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit and embody in a signed agreement any understanding reached. I shall also recommend that Respondent be ordered to post appropriate notices.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[9]

ORDER

The Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation, Boulder, Colorado, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to recognize, meet with, and bargain with International Guards Union of America, Local 66, as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

---

[8] In reaching any decision, I find it unnecessary to consider certain factors in this case, such as assessing the performance of the Union's attorneys during the time covered by this case, or deciding whether Lynes' personal circumstances excused the Union's failure to pursue its original demand for bargaining before 23 April 1987.

[9] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

All full time and regular part time guard employees employed by the Respondent at its Boulder, Colorado location, but excluding all office clerical employees and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed to them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, recognize and bargain collectively with International Guards Union of America, Local 66, as exclusive representative of its employees in the above-described appropriate bargaining unit, and embody in a signed agreement any understanding reached.

(b) Post at its Boulder, Colorado facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[10] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 27, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[10] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize, meet with, and bargain with International Guards of America. Local 66, as the exclusive representative of our employees in the following appropriate unit:

All full time and regular part time guard employees employed by the Respondent at its Boulder, Colorda location, but excluding all office clerical employees and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, recognize, meet with, and bargain collectively with the above-named Union as the exclusive representative of our employees in the unit set forth above, and embody in a signed agreement any understanding reached.

WELLS FARGO ARMORED SERVICE CORPORATION

Lee & Sons Tree Service and Carl Strothers and Gregory Strange. Cases 1–CA–18017 and 5–CA–18114

August 19, 1988

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On June 13, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Walter H. Maloney issued the attached second supplemental decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Lee & Sons Tree Service, Oxon Hill, Maryland, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall pay Angela Murphy the sum set out in the recommended Order.

[1] We find that the Respondent has failed to meet its burden of proof regarding either of the contentions made in its exceptions. Concerning the contention that additional deductions from discriminatee Angela Murphy's gross backpay should be made for several "unpaid holidays," there is insufficient evidence of any specific holiday when the Respondent ceased operations and did not pay its employees. Concerning the contention that the Respondent was denied the opportunity to examine Murphy about her search for interim earnings because she did not testify, there is no evidence that she was unavailable to testify or that the Respondent made any effort to compel her testimony.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

WALTER H. MALONEY, Administrative Law Judge. This case came on for hearing before me in Washington, D.C., on March 23, 1988, on a backpay specification issued by the Regional Director for Region 5 on November 16, 1987, which alleges that there is due and owing to six named discriminatees the amounts of backpay with interest that were set forth after their names in the appendices to the specification. The backpay obligation arose as the result of a Board Order, dated January 28, 1987 (282 NLRB 905), which granted the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment and found that the Respondent had discharged these six individuals on April 14, 1986, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (4) of the Act. Respondent agreed that the formula selected by the Regional Director for computing backpay was correct, but disputed any obligation to include in the computations certain holidays and other days on which its work force did not work because of inclement weather. The Respondent also denied any obligation to reinstate discriminatee Carl Strothers because of asserted misconduct on his part following his discharge.

Either at the hearing or at some point in time thereafter, the General Counsel and the Respondent entered into individual settlement agreements involving the cases of discriminatees William Johnson, Louis Ross, Maurice Ross, Gregory Strange, and Carl Strothers. The settlement agreements either have been approved by me or are approved in this decision, and they are severed from this case. As a result there is left for adjudication only the amount due and owing to discriminatee Angela Murphy.

At the hearing the Respondent's president, Melvin Lee, testified that his firm gave regular paid holidays for Christmas, Thanksgiving, Independence Day, New Year's Day, and Martin Luther King's Birthday. The holidays were included in the General Counsel's original computation of gross backpay, which was made on a weekly basis, so that figure need not be disturbed because of the Respondent's contention relating to holidays. The General Counsel and the Respondent agreed that during the backpay period,[1] Respondent's employees lost about 24 days because of inclement weather, but were paid 2 hours for each of those days.[2] Accordingly, backpay computations must be reduced by 6 hours, on a quarterly basis, for each of those days, at Murphy's hourly rate of $5.82. The resulting computation for Angela Murphy is as follows:

Year/Qtr.	Original gross backpay computation	Less time lost for inclement weather	Net backpay
1986/2	$2,560.80	0	$2,560.80
1986/3	3,026.40	[1]104.76	2,921.64
1986/4	3,026.40	[2]384.12	2,642.28
1987/1	1,862.40	[3]349.20	1,513.20
Total			$9,637.92

[1] 3 days x 6 hours x $5.82 = $104.76.
[2] 11 days x 6 hours x $5.82 = $384.12.
[3] 10 days x 6 hours x $5.82 = $349.20.

The Respondent argues in its brief that the net backpay due and owing to A. Murphy should be further reduced by some unspecified amount because of what amounts to willful loss. It argues that her failure to ask for her job back before the Respondent made a formal tender of reinstatement is somehow evidence of an unwillingness on her part to work. The Respondent in this case was the wrongdoer. An obligation to offer reinstatement falls squarely on it, under the terms of the Board's Order, before it can be excused from backpay liability.

[1] The backpay period for all the discriminatees ran from April 14, 1986, the date on which they were discharged, until February 28, 1987, the date on which five of them were offered reinstatement. The computation for Strothers continued to run after that date, but that fact need not concern us now.

[2] The days in question were August 28, September 1 and 2, October 13 and 14, November 5, 11, and 26, and December 2, 9, 11, 18, 20, 26, 1986, and January 2, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, and February 2 and 3, 1987.

Respondent argues further that the failure of the General Counsel to place A. Murphy on the stand somehow precluded it from examining her as to the diligence with which she sought other employment during the backpay period. The burden to establish willful loss, either through failure to make an adequate search for work or otherwise, belongs to the Respondent. A. Murphy was present at the hearing in this case and the Respondent could easily have called her to the stand for this purpose had it desired to do so. Its failure in this regard in no way shifts the burden of proof in backpay proceedings, nor does it serve in any way to diminish the amount of backpay which is otherwise due and owing.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[3]

ORDER

The Respondent, Lee & Sons Tree Service, Oxon Hill, Maryland, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall pay to Angela Murphy the sum of $9,637.92, with interest as computed at the short term Federal rate used to compute interest on underpayments and overpayments of Federal income taxes under the provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, less withholdings for taxes and social security required by Federal and state laws. New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).

[3] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation and Northeast Armed Guards and Security Association. Case 1–CA–25070

August 19, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On June 13, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Marion C. Ladwig issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation, Wakefield, Massachusetts its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

Substitute the following for paragraph 2(c).

"(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply."

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

Kathleen F. McCarty, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Thomas Franklin, Esq., of Atlanta, Georgia, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MARION C. LADWIG, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried in Boston, Massachussets, on March 10, 1988. The charge was filed November 2, 1987[1] (amended Dec. 9), and the complaint was issued January 15, 1988.

In negotiations on May 1, 1985, the Union (a newly formed guard union) rejected the Company's "final offer" of about $5.50 an hour for employees who were then being paid about $9.50 an hour. The Union, preferring to retain the higher wage without a contract rather than obtain a contract with that pay cut, continued to represent the employees without a written contract while organizing other armored guard company employees.

On October 15, 1987, after being certified at a second company and after engaging an experienced negotiator to serve as business agent, the Union submitted a written "request for a speedy resumption of our return to the bargaining table." The Company refused to deal with the business agent and withdrew its recognition of the Union. Despite the near 100-percent membership of the guards in the Union, the Company contends that the Union "abandoned or disclaimed the unit it was certified to represent" and that the Company "has justifiable grounds to assert a good faith doubt of [the Union's] continued majority support."

The primary issues are whether the Company, the Respondent, unlawfully withdrew recognition and refused to bargain with the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after considering the briefs filed by the General Counsel and the Company, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Company, a corporation, at its facility in Wakefield, Massachusetts, transports money and other valuables for banks and other customers. It annually performs services valued over $50,000 in other States. The Company admits and I find that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act and that the Union is labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Representation Without Written Agreement

On January 9, 1985, the Union was certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time messenger-guards and driver-guards employed by Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation at its Wakefield, Massachusetts location, but excluding all other employees, money room employees, vault employees, coin room employees, office clerical employees, technical employees, mechanics, professional employees, and all supervisors as defined in the Act.

The employees had voted 18–0 for representation by the Union (G.C. Exh. 2D).

In the fifth negotiating session on May 1, 1985, the Company made a final offer of a wage package of about $5.50 an hour for the crew members who were then "in the $9.50 range." As Union President Robert Currier credibly testified, "The Union, at that time, felt that things were better left alone. As long as the company didn't have a rollback on the employees . . . that we wouldn't attempt to come to a written bargaining agreement at the time." (Tr. 57–58.) The Company continued to pay the higher wages and in May 1987 gave the unit employees a wage increase (Tr. 73). It gave this increase and made other changes in working conditions without consulting with the Union (Tr. 77–78).

[1] All dates are in 1987 unless otherwise indicated.

Meanwhile the Union continued to meet with the Company and attempted to resolve problems despite the absence of a grievance procedure.

It is undisputed, as Union President Currier credibly testified, that he met with the branch manager quite often in 1985, 1986, and 1987. The Company "changed branch managers quite often, and I've met and talked with all of them about union activity." Either the new branch manager or Currier, the secretary-treasurer (John Caughey or Michael Costa), and Trustee Ralph Leavy would request a meeting. Ususally more than one of the union representatives would attend these meetings. They discussed with the branch manager the lack of a union agreement, working conditions, the shortage of employees at the Wakefield branch, and various complaints and concerns. (Tr. 59–60, 67–69.)

The union representatives also met with the branch manger concerning a number of disciplinary actions. On one occasion in the spring of 1987 the Union was successful in getting employee William Damon reinstated On other occasion that spring the Union succeeded in getting employee Ralph Leavy's suspension reduced. (Tr. 80–81.)

About July 7 Union President Currier and Secretary-Treasurer Costa met Branch Manager Larry Gleak concerning the Company's withdrawing a 50-cent increase that employees Paul Brickley and John Martin had received in May. The union representatives "explained to [Gleak] that we were short manpower, there was a labor shortage on the premises, and to bring the rollback in pay would only create more headaches." Gleak promised to speak to Assistant Vice President Joseph Marinelli about it. (Tr. 29–30.)

On July 21 Currier and Costa again met with Gleak, along with Assistant Branch Manager David Heagan. Gleak stated that he had spoken to Marinelli and told them that the wage increase had been a clerical error (the employees being in the wrong classification) and that the rollback would stand. Currier stated that they were seeking "some kind of compromise that we could bring back to the membership, that would pacify the membership." He asked that the Company restore the wages immediately "because we should be talking about other things that were a concern in the garage, working conditions and so on." Then "we came to an impasse, and I suggested that they were backing us into a corner, and we couldn't do anything else except have a job action." It is undisputed that Gleak stated, or agreed, that "the ball is really in our court." (Neither Gleak nor Heagan testified.) (Tr. 30–311, 61–63, 73–75.)

The next day, Wednesday, July 22, the Union met and decided to have a 1-day job action. Then on Friday morning, July 24, President Currier telephoned the vault supervisor and advised him that the crewmembers in the bargaining unit would not be showing up to work that day "because of the impasse we had with the company in regards to the Brickley and Martin case." All except two of the unit employees stayed off the job that day—without any placards or picketing. (All, or nearly all the approximately 22 crewmembers were union memebers. A total of 19 of them paid dues that month. (Tr. 42; G.C. Exh. 5.) The employees returned to work Saturday, the following day, and continued to work without a union agreement. (Tr. 32–33, 35, 43, 63–64.)

B. Withdrawal of Recognition

The Union was conducting a successful organizing campaign at Brinks in Boston and also in Providence. It was certified for the guard unit in Boston on September 25 and in Providence about December or early 1988. (Tr. 16.)

On October 4 (Tr. 7) the Union selected Bertram Farnham, an experienced labor leader (Tr. 17), to be its business agent and secretary-treasurer. (He had briefly (Tr. 8) served as secretary-treasurer when the Union was founded in November 1984.)

On October 15 Farnham and President Costa, along with Trustee Leavy, who had been discharged about a week earlier, met with Assistant Vice President Marinelli and Branch Manager Heagan. Franham handed Marinelli a letter, dated October 15, that read:

> Please accept this notice as a request for a speedy resumption of our return to the bargaining table for the purpose of concluding a collective bargaining agreement. The [Union] waits your early reply. Please contact the undersigned [Farnham] at the following address.

Farnham identified himself as the Union's secretary-treasurer and business agent. (Tr. 9–13, 18, 36–37.)

Marinelli refused to recognize the Union or to deal with Farnham. He stated that the Company would not recognize Farnham as the secretary-treasurer of the Union and would not discuss anything with him, but that he had no objection to talking to employee Costa and to Leavy about his discharge (Tr. 12, 37). Neither Marinelli nor anyone else with the Company responded to the Union's written request to resume bargaining (Tr. 14).

Thus the Company on October 15 withdrew its recognition of the Union and since then has refused to bargain with it.

C. The Company's Defenses

The Company offers two defenses for withdrawing recognition and refusing to bargain with the Union.

First, the Company contends in its brief (at 4) that the Union "abandoned or disclaimed the unit it was certified to represent." It refers (at 5) to the Union's decision that "it was better to negotiate a collective-bargaining agreement and to leave everything status quo." Then, ignoring the evidence that the Union continued to represent the employees in meetings with the branch managers, the Company claims that the Union "never did again represent the employees." I reject this defense as frivolous.

Second, the Company contends (at 8) that "the facts of this case give rise to good faith, reasonable doubt as to [the Union's] majority status." It argues (at 9–10)

> The Union exerted no authority and no power from May 1985 until it filed the present charge. Wells Fargo Armored made many unilateral changes in working conditions without consulting anyone or any union. The Union never complained of these changes and never filed any unfair labor practice charges over them. Wells Fargo fired 18 people between 1985 and 1987. No grievances were filed or pursued. There was a one day strike on 24 July 1987. No one from [the Union] called Wells Fargo Armored and identified the strike as a [union] event. . . . The turnover at this branch was tremendous. Two hundred and nine employees worked in the unit classifications in a three year period. Today only six of the original group of employees remain in the unit.
>
> The large amount of time which was passed without union activity further suggests a lack of support by the employees of the Union. The last bargaining session was 1 May 1985. Twenty nine months passed before the [Union] made a request to meet with and bargain with the Company in October 1987.
>
> . . . .
>
> All the above factors form the basis for a reasonable, good faith doubt as to [the Union's] continued majority support.

Thus the Company cites no evidence of any employee disaffection with the Union and ignores the evidence that a large majority of the unit employees were dues-paying members. It also ignores the undisputed testimony that before the 1-day strike Union President Currier told the branch manager and his assistant that the union representatives were seeking a compromise "we could bring back to . . . pacify [our] membership" and warned them that they "were backing us into a corner, and we couldn't do anything except have a job action." The Company was therefore aware that the strike was a union event. The failure to protest the Company's unilateral actions and to file grievances relates to the absence of a collective-bargaining agreement and to the perceived relative strength of the parties in the bargaining relationship—not to any doubt of union support.

Although unable to negotiate a satisfactory collective-bargaining agreement, the Union continued to represent the unit employees and to command their support.

D. Concluding Findings

In Alexander Linn Hospital, 288 NLRB 103 (1988), the Board quoted the "longstanding legal principals" governing the withdrawal of recognition:

> After the certification year the presumption of majority status becomes rebuttable. . . . An employer who refuses to bargain with an incumbent union may rebut the presumption of majority status by establishing either (1) that at the time of the refusal to bargain the union in fact did not enjoy majority status, or (2) that the refusal was predicated on a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt, supported by objective considerations, of the union's majority support.

As in that case, at fn. 19, "There is no evidence, nor any contention, that the Union had in fact lost its majority status." Instead, the evidence shows that a large majority of the unit employees were dues-paying members.

The Company, however, argues in its brief (at 7) that "A lot of time has passed since the date of certification" and "there was a tremendous amount of turnover." But, as in Alexander Linn Hospitals, the Company's "reliance on employee turnover is misplaced. The Board presumes that new employees support the union. See Laystrom Mfg. Co., 151 NLRB 1482 (1965), enf. denied 359 F.2d 799 (7th Cir. 1966)." The Company has offered no evidence of union nonsupport to rebut that presumption.

I find that the Company did not have a good-faith and reasonable doubt, supported by objective considerations, of the Union's majority status. I, therefore, find that its October 15 withdrawal of recognition from the Union and its refusal to bargain since then violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By withdrawing recognition from the Union on October 15, 1987, and refusing to bargain since then, the Company engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find that it must be ordered to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[2]

ORDER

The Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation, Wakefield, Massachusetts, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain with Northeast Armed Guards and Security Association as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit on terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the understanding in a signed agreement:

---

[2] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

> All full-time and regular part-time messenger-guards and driver-guards employed by Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation at its Wakefield, Massachusetts location, but excluding all other employees, money room employees, vault employees, coin room employees, office clerical employees, technical employees, mechanics, professional employees, and all supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Post at its facility in Wakefield, Massachusetts, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[3] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain with Northeast Armed Guards and Security Association as the exclusive representative of our employees in the bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, recognize and bargain with the Union and put in writing and sign any agreement reached on terms and conditions of employment for our employees in the bargaining unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time messenger-guards and driver-guards employed by Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation at its Wakefield, Massachusetts location, but excluding all other employees, money room employees, vault employees, coin room employees, office clerical employees, technical employees, mechanics, professional employees, and all supervisors as defined in the Act.

WELLS FARGO ARMORED SERVICE CORPORATION

Fox-Art Theatres, Inc. and Philadelphia Moving Picture Machine Operators Union Local No. 37 a/w International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of the U.S. and Canada. Cases 4–CA–14631, 4–CA–14631–2, and 4–CA–14735

August 22, 1988

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 28, 1986, the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order[1] ordering the Respondent, inter alia, to make employee Irwin Kamner whole for any loss of earnings and benefits resulting from the Respondent's unfair labor practices, which violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, and to make whole its unit employees for their losses and make payments on their behalf to the Union Pension Plan and Welfare and Insurance Fund for losses resulting from the Respondent's unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, and its failure to comply with the provisions of Section 8(d).

On August 29, 1986, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit entered its consent judgment enforcing the Board's Decision and Order.

On February 29, 1988, the Regional Director for Region 4 issued a backpay specification and notice of hearing. The Respondent filed a timely answer to the backpay specification. In its answer, the Respondent admitted each allegation in the specification.

On July 1, 1988, the General Counsel filed with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment. In her motion, the General Counsel contends that the Respondent has raised no question of fact or law regarding the Respondent's obligation under the Board's Order, as enforced, and that the Respondent's obligations total $42,662.70, plus interest, as calculated and set forth in the backpay specification.

On July 6, 1988, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the General Counsel's motion should not be granted. On July 20, 1988, the Respondent filed a response.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.54 of the Board's Rules and Regulations provides in pertinent part as follows:

> (a) . . . The respondent shall, within 21 days from the service of the specification, if any, file an answer thereto. . . .
>
> (b) . . . The respondent shall specifically admit, deny, or explain each and every allegation of the specification, unless the respondent is without knowledge, in which case the respondent shall so state, such statement operating as a denial. Denials shall fairly meet the substance of the allegations of the specification denied. . . . As to all matters within the knowledge of the respondent, including but not limited to the various factors entering into the computation of gross backpay, a general denial shall not suffice.
>
> (c) . . . If the respondent files an answer to the specification but fails to deny any allegation of the specification in the manner required by subsection (d) of this section, and the failure so to deny is not adequately explained, such allegation shall be deemed to be admitted to be true, and may be so found by the Board without the taking of evidence supporting such allegation, and the respondent shall be precluded from introducing any evidence controverting said allegation.

In its response to the Notice to Show Cause ("Respondent's answer to General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment"), the Respondent admits that its obligations under the Board's Order total $42,662.70, plus interest, as calculated and set forth in the backpay specification, but states that "[i]t is denied that the Respondent has raised no questions of fact or law requiring a hearing or any further litigation as to its make whole obligations under the Board's Order, as enforced, insofar as the averment is a conclusion of law to which no response is required and the same is therefore denied." The response to the Notice to Show Cause fails to state specifically the basis for disagreement with the backpay specification or the question of fact or law that the Respondent has raised.

Accordingly, as the Respondent's answer has admitted each of the allegations of the backpay specification and the Respondent has not specifically denied the allegations of the backpay specification in its response to the Notice to Show Cause, nor adequately explained its failure to do so, we will grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment and deem the allegations of the backpay specification to be admitted as true pursuant to Section 102.54(c).

[1] 278 NLRB 812 (1986).

ORDER

It is ordered that the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Respondent, Fox-Arf Theatres, Inc., Narberth, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall make whole Irwin Kamner and each of the unit employees listed in the backpay specification by paying them the amounts stated in the specification, with interest to be computed in the manner prescribed in New Horizons for the Retarded,[2] and by paying on employees' behalf to the Union's Pension Plan and Welfare and Insurance Fund amounts set forth in the backpay specification, with interest.

[2] 283 NLRB 1173 (1987). Interest will be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621.

Ziniz, Inc. and Lee Murray

Local 207, Successor to Local 1241, Millwrights and Piledrivers, a/w United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO and Lee Murray. Cases 9–CA–24673 and 9–CB–6897

August 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On March 31, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Joel A. Harmatz issued the attached decision. The Respondent Employer filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that Respondent Employer Ziniz, Inc., Louisville, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, and that Respondent Union Local 270, successor to Local 1241, Millwrights and Piledrivers, a/w United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO, Columbus, Ohio, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the attached Appendix A[2] is substituted for that of the administrative law judge.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] Minor grammatical errors in the judge's notice to employees have been corrected.

APPENDIX A

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT discharge or otherwise discriminate against you because you have attempted to enforce terms and conditions specified in our collective-bargaining agreement with Local 207, successor to Local 1241, Millwrights and Piledrivers, a/w United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO.

WE WILL NOT threaten to discharge employees because they have attempted to enforce the terms of the aforesaid collective-bargaining agreement.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Bobby Lee Murray and Al Grubb Jr., immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs on the UPS Project, if those jobs still exist, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less interim earnings, plus interest as set forth in the Decision of the Administrative Law Judge.

ZINIZ, INC.

Engrid Emerson Vaughn, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Dennis J. Stilger, Esq. (Hebel, Hornung, and Stilger), of Louisville, Kentucky, for the Respondent Employer.
Frederick G. Cloppert, Jr., Esq. (Cloppert, Partman, Sauter, Latanick & Foley), for the Respondent Union.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JOEL A. HARMATZ, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard by me in Columbus, Ohio, on 7 and 8 January 1988, on unfair labor practice charges filed separately on 17 September 1987 against Respondent Union and Respondent Employer. Based thereon, a consolidated complaint issued on 18 December 1987, alleging that Respondent Union independently violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by threatening employees because they asserted rights acquired under a collective-bargaining agreement, by physically assaulting an employee because he expressed an intent to file unfair labor practice charges, by threatening an employee with a loss of work unless he agreed to drop intraunion and/or unfair labor practice charges, and by refusing and failing to accept employee grievances for processing under the subsisting collective-bargaining agreement. The complaint further alleged that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by causing or attempting to cause Respondent Employer to layoff or terminate employees Lee Murray, Al Gribb, Vincent Monteneri, and Homer Halley, because, inter alia, they concertedly complained about working conditions. Additionally, the complaint, as amended, alleged that Respondent Employer violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by terminating the above-named employees on request of Respondent Union or, alternatively, because they concertedly complained about working conditions. Finally, it is alleged that Respondent Employer independently violated Section 8(a)(1) by threatening employees with discharge because they persisted in such complaints. In duly filed answers; Respondents denied that any unfair labor practices were committed. After close of the hearing, briefs were filed on behalf of the General Counsel, the Respondent Union, and the Respondent Employer.

On the entire record in this proceeding, including my opportunity directly to observe the witnesses while testifying and their demeanor,[1] and after consideration of the posthearing briefs it is found as follows.

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent Employer, a Kentucky corporation, is engaged as a contractor in the construction industry in various States of the United States, including a project calling for the installation of equipment at a United Parcel Service (UPS) facility in Columbus, Ohio, the sole jobsite involved in this proceeding. During the 12-month period preceding issuance of the complaint, a representative period, Respondent Employer purchased and received at that jobsite goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Ohio.

The complaint alleges, Respondent Employer admits, and I find that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The complaint alleges, the parties concede, and I find that Respondent Local 207 (the Union) is a successor to Local 1241, Millwrights and Piledrivers, affiliated with United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO and a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Preliminary Statement

The issue of primary remedial concern in this proceeding arises from the midjob layoff of a number of union millwrights. All were members of Respondent Union. Initially the complaint rested exclusively on a theory that the discrimination was inspired by Respondent Union. This view was premised on the notion that, when longstanding union members asserted rights under a collective-bargaining agreement negotiated by the Union, the latter's functionaries were so offended that they intervened to cause the Employer to furlough the complaining employees. At the hearing, however, the complaint was amended to add an alternative theory, which assumes that the Respondent Employer acted to punish these workers for the complaints.

The jobsite involved was located in Columbus, Ohio, within the geographic jurisidiction of Respondent Union. Respondent Ziniz, a contractor based in Louisville, Kentucky, had been retained on that job to install a conveyor system on behalf of United Parcel Service. The general contractor was nonunion. However, Ziniz, prior to the commencement of work, agreed to be bound to the Respondent-Union's agreement covering millwrights on this job.[2]

Work commenced in early January 1987, and initially was scheduled for completion some 54 weeks later in January 1988. Jay McMillan was the Employer's superintendent on the job. The general foreman was Tom Waller, a union member, who was retained by McMillan, on recommendation of Respondent Union's business agent, David Evans. All millwrights were referred by Evans pursuant to the 48-hour, exclusive hiring arrangement set forth in article 4 of the governing collective-bargaining agreement. The job was manned also by crafts outside the Union's jurisdiction, including operating engineers and ironworkers.

Lee Murray (the Charging Party) is the central figure in this controversy. He is a journeyman millwright and a longstanding member of the Union. He was referred by the latter for employment with Ziniz in March 1987.[3] On 28 August, Respondent laid off two apprentice millwrights, six journeyman millwrights, two ironworkers, and a foreman. Since the layoff, up to the date of the hearing, Ziniz has hired four millwrights through the hiring hall. It does not appear that any of the 11 furloughed employees ever again were referred to the UPS jobsite.

The General Counsel contends that of the 11 that lost their jobs, Murray, Grubb, Monteneri, and Halley were unlawfully furloughed in reprisal for their efforts repeatedly to secure Respondent Employer's adherence to the collective-bargaining agreement—conduct that clearly falls within the protective mantle of Section 7 of the Act. Interboro Contractors, 157 NLRB 1295 (1966), enfd. 388 F.2d 495 (2d Cir. 1967); NLRB v. City Disposal Systems, 465 U.S. 822 (1984).

B. Concluding Analysis

1. The alleged protected activity

The complaint is critically dependent on parol testimony by Murray, which from time to time was augmented through the corroborative efforts of Grubb and Monteneri. Their testimony ranged from the entirely believable, to heavily exaggerated, to absolutely improbable. All three struck me as laboring under a conspiratorial bias. In any event, there can be little dispute that Murray and his coworkers, during their tenure on the job, questioned the compliance by Ziniz with the dictates of the collective-bargaining agreement, thereby satisfying the initial element of the General Counsel's burden.

Objectively viewed, certain of their complaints inherently would tend to serve as stronger irritant to management than others. The early complaints seemed less extreme. None on their face typically would arouse emnity of the average labor functionary. All were confined to a 5-month period coextensive with Murray's tenure on the job. Thus, Murray testified that during the first week of his employment in March he complained about Ziniz' failure to furnish welding gloves and other safety equipment. He allegedly informed Business Agent Evans that Foreman Waller instructed Murray to purchase his own equipment for use on the job. On the credited evidence, however, it is concluded that the shop steward on the job, Rick Satterfield, did secure welding gloves for Murray, and welding glasses were also provided by management. As for the other safety equipment, based on the credited testimony of Business Agent Evans, contrary to Murray, it is concluded that the millwrights were required to provide their own welding hoods. Thus, in this area, the issues were routinely resolved in consonance with the contract through union intervention and without incident.

[1] Credibility resolutions made are occasionally accompanied by objective rationale. This is intended to reinforce, not diminish, perceptions gained through my firsthand observation of the witnesses and their demeanor. Furthermore, unmentioned testimony is rejected to the extent that it is irreconcilable with expresaly credited evidence.

[2] See G.C. Exh. 2.

[3] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates referred to are in 1987.

Receiving a similar disposition was Murray's complaint in May to Evans that the Company had refused to provide ice water as required by the contract. According to the credible evidence, the incident arose in mid-April, apparently due to unseasonably hot weather, and was corrected in due course. Any delay was attributable to the fact that ice water is generally the responsibility of the general contractor, who in this case was nonunion.

Murray, without corroboration, testified that, during the summer, he and other men complained about an unsafe condition created when workers were lifted by fork trucks without handrails and safety belts. As I understand Murray's testimony, when he complained to Satterfield, he was told, "you had a complaint, go down the road"; and when the issue was raised with General Foreman Tom Waller, "he just laughed at us." Nothing in the background suggests a probability that either Satterfield or Waller would have reacted at that time with such hostility when such a clearly defined safety hazard was called to their attention.

Murray's more current complaints were not resolved favorably to the employees. The first involved an alleged violation of article 16, paragraph 1 of the collective-bargaining agreement, which, in material part, states: "No foreman shall be in charge of more than six (6) men, another foreman for each six (6) millwrights thereafter will be appointed." At the time, Murray's crew apparently included Grubb, Monteneri, Bill Tomlin, and Phil Meyers. They were assigned to Foreman Danny Offill. About a week before the layoff, Offill was off work, apparently due to illness, for 2 days. Instead of naming a new foreman, General Foreman Waller assigned the crew to Foreman Bob Dillon. Dillon already had a crew and informed Murray that during this period he had between 13 and 15 men working under him. According to Murray, when he protested to Dillon, the latter agreed that the arrangement was incorrect but stated that "the company had a policy of breaking the contract" and that the business agent, and Thomas Waller, the general foreman of Ziniz, both had approved it, and that this is the way they were running the job.[4]

That same morning at approximately 8 o'clock, Murray assertedly sought out Waller, informing him that under the contract he was supposed to designate a foreman from the crew and that Dillon was barred from supervising 15 men. According to Murray, Waller responded, "that he was running the job and that he made the decisions." Murray was told that if he did not like it, he could "go down the road and find another job somewhere else."[5] Murray could not recall if he was accompanied, but then asserted a belief that Grubb was present. Grubb denied that this was the case. Murray then sought out Steward Satterfield. During a coffeebreak, he, together with Monteneri and Grubb,[6] informed Satterfield that Dillion was working 15 men, while Offill was off, and that Ziniz should have designated one of the journeymen as foreman, paying him the 75-cent hourly differential. According to Murray, Satterfield responded that it was Waller and Dave Evans who were running the job and that Satterfield could be of no help.[7]

The next day, Murray, having had no success, confronted Job Superintendent McMillan inquiring who made policy on the job. McMillan acknowledged that he was in charge. Murray then asked if it was his policy "to break our contract, and beat a man out of a lousy 75-cents an hour for a couple of days here?" McMillan replied in the negative. When Murray argued that he had been deprived of 75 cents an hour during the 2-day

---

[4] Dillon was not called, and hence there is no explanation for the seemingly implausible remarks attributed to him by Murray. My suspicion of his account was enforced by my belief of Evan's testimony that he agreed with Murray and pressed his view to Superintendent McMillan. I was singularly unimpressed with Murray. His demeanor reflected a contentious posture, and a propensity to impose self-centered views on others through baseless argumentation, half-truths, exaggeration, and a manipulative, somewhat creative, approach to fact. On several occasions, his efforts to further his cause through declarations founded on mistaken perception impelled him to recant. Moreover, in the total circumstances, it is considered unlikely that Evans would have approved this departure from the contract, or that Dillon, himself a union official, would have indicted his business agent in a sell out to management. It is also difficult to believe that the Union would have forsaken its representational duties where the total value of the contract breach was $12. It is true that Monteneri and Grubb attempted to corroborate that Dillon stated that Evans had approved the breach of contract. I discredit them as well. Neither Grubb nor Murray identified Monteneri as present during the conversation with Dillon.

[5] General Foreman Waller, like Foreman Dibbs, was a longstanding member of Local 207 and its predecessors.

[6] Monteneri was not part of the crew and as an apprentice, he had no pecuniary stake in the outcome.

[7] Earlier, in April, Murray claims to have raised the same basic issue. He states that on that occasion an individual named Bleemel was supervising five crews, and also had a personal crew of 8 to 10 employees, including Murray. Murray claims that Bleemel on one occasion assigned him to work independently with three or four men on blueprints. Murray felt on that occasion that one of them should have received foreman wages. However, when he told Evans about it, Evans told Murray to forget it. This seemed an appropriate response, for Bleemel was Ziniz' key man on the job. Even if a general foreman, however, Bleemel was not limited contractually to the number of men he could superise. Murray had other complaints about Bleemel, including a charge that he worked with tools, conduct that Murray later admitted to be unrestricted by the president contract.

period of Offill's absence, McMillan indicated that he would take care of it.[9]

Murray did not again hear from McMillan. When he discovered that the extra 75 cents was not in his paycheck, he again sought out McMillan. McMillan this time allegedly told Murray that he had discussed the issue with Evans, and that Evans told him that as far as he was concerned the ratio was correct. McMillan went on to explain that when the total number of foremen on the job is divided into the total complement of millwrights, the resulting ratio was in compliance with that specified in the contract. Murray disputed this interpretation, arguing that Evans did not have the authority to delete, add to, or modify the contract. McMillan indicated that the decision was final, and that Murray would not be paid the additional sum.[9]

During their coffeebreak, Evans and Monteneri requested and were given permission to use McMillan's telephone to call Evans. Murray avers that Evans indicated that he had approved the Company's position that the seven foremen on the job were sufficient if divided by the total work force. Murray disagreed, going on to state that he had complained about union conditions for sometime, and that Evans had corrected none of them. He advised Evans that he would appreciate a transfer to another project if Evans was going to run the Ziniz job nonunion. Murray asked for a job in Cambridge, Ohio, but Evans told him "if you want another job, you just come down here, and quit that job, and come down here and go on the bottom of the list, and wait your turn, and I'll send you out when I get around to it." Evans allegedly told Murray that it was Evans' obligation to man the Ziniz job and Murray should stay right there. Monteneri then got on the phone and talked to Evans. Monteneri relates that Evans lectured that Murray was a "troublemaker" and that Monteneri should watch who he hung around with. According to Murray, McMillan was at his desk and in a position to overhear segments of their conversation.

The month of August was marked by several other issues championed by Murray. The first addressed the Company's employment of workers from Kentucky.

Murray's concern here was twofold: (1) an out-of-state foreman was retained in contravention of article 16, paragraph 4, which requires that "all foreman shall be qualified journeyman and members of the union having jurisdiction,"[10] and (2) the possibility that out-of-state millwrights might be retained when local millwrights are laid off. Shortly before the layoff, Murray avers that he had two conversations with Satterfield regarding this issue. First, Murray complained that the Company's use of foreman from Kentucky was wrong when qualified local people, who pay dues in the area, and were qualified to handle the work, were denied the opportunity. Satterfield allegedly replied that there were no local people available, an explanation that allegedly was echoed by Evans, when the problem was presented to him by Murray.

In the second conversation, Satterfield allegedly responded that he had discussed the issue with Evans and that Evans indicated that if the employees had grievances and complaints to go down the road and look for another job, because no grievances or complaints would be accepted on the UPS project.[11] When Murray allegedly sought to confirm that the Union would refuse to accept a grievance, Satterfield indicated that that is exactly what Evans told him to relate to Murray.[12]

A jurisdictional issue triggered the final complaint registered in August. In this regard, Murray relates that in the week before the layoff, while he, Grubb, and Monteneri were working on the belt crew, they observed members of Local 18 of the International Union of Operating Engineers installing guards and drive chains on the conveyor and running the overhead crane on the job. Murray felt that this was an intrusion on traditional millwright work. When approached, according to Murray, the operating engineers explained that the work had been assigned by Foreman Waller. In the presence of other members of his crew, Murray raised the issue with Foreman Dillon, who allegedly stated that he was without authority to alter the condition, if Waller had okayed it. Murray, together with Monteneri, then reported the matter to Satterfield.[13] Next Murray went to see Waller,

[9] The mere fact that Murray carried the matter to McMillan raises suspicion. At a minimum, it suggests that he did not accept that Evans had licensed the arrangement. Along that same line, in accord with Murray's account, one might rightfully assume that McMillan was either unmindful that Evans had condoned any such arrangement, or that, unlike Dillon, he declined to rebuff Murray with that information. Needless to say, I did not believe Murray, or anyone else who related that they received information that Evans concurred in the Employer's interpretation of art. 16.

[9] Murray states that this conversation took place in the presence of Grubb. It is the sense of Grubb's testimony that he was not present.

[10] An exception to this policy is suggested by art. 4, par. 2, wich authorizes employer to select one foreman "and/or" one key man.

[11] Monteneri describes the issue differently. He states that they complained to Satterfield that Kentucky men were on the job while local men were on the Union's out-of-work list. This varies meterially from the description of the issues offered by other witnesses, but if true, would provide a logical foundation to Satterfield's alleged response that "there were no local people available." Monteneri also stands alone in offering testimony concerning an incident arising 2 to 3 weeks prior to the layoff. Thus, he states that "we complained to Satterfield and Evans about the hire of an inexperienced foreman, whereupon they got the same general answer, i.e., "you want to complain, just find another job." Monteneri did not identify who else was involved in the incident, and his uncorroborated testimony is rejected.

[12] Satterfield acknowledged that prior to the layoff, in response to rumors, several men, including Murray, asserted that out-of-staters should be the first to go. He could recall no other complaints concerning that group. However, he, together with Evans, credibly related that the position advanced by the Union to management accorded with Murray's view and supported the local area preference. For this reason, and because the testimony of Murray, Monteneri, and Grubb in this regard did not ring true, I reject testimony that he suggested that they should quit, rather than register complaints. I also discredit the uncorroborated testimony of Murray that Satterfield took the position that grievances would not be accepted on the job.

[13] Satterfield testified that he checked the complaint only to find that Foreman Dillon and the operating engineers denied any intrusion on millwright's work. Although he did not personally observe any violation, Satterfield reported the charge to Evans and McMillan. Evans testified that in response he visited the jobsite and instructed McMillan to respect the jurisdictional rights of his Union. Evans also claims that he received and responded to a second complaint concerning the operating engineers. According to Evans, when he confronted Waller in this regard, Waller explained that the operating engineers were underworked and standing around. Evans claims to have rejected this excuse, insisting that they not challenging his right to assign the operating engineers to do millwright work. As I understand Murray's testimony, Waller explained that because the operating engineers were experiencing downtime, he opted to utilize them where he could, rather than having them sit around or be laid off.[14]

Continued

2. Foreman Waller's threat

The most crucial testimony in this case relates to an alleged encounter with Waller on the Wednesday prior to the layoff. At the time, a number of workers were on break, gathered around a coffee truck.[15] According to Murray, as the men were rehashing their jurisdictional complaints, Waller approached. Murray asked, "Tom, are you going to straighten this crap out?" Murray assertedly stated that the job was not being run according to the contract, that he could not live with it, and that he would file charges and get a hearing before the Union's district council against Waller and Dave Evans. Waller responded that he was running the job, and that he did not have to explain his decisions and actions to anyone. He allegedly told Murray that if he did not like the way he ran the job, Murray could quit, adding that if the men were going to "bitch together," they could "go down the road together."[16] These threatening remarks, including Waller's prediction that concerted complaints by employees concerning their working conditions would lead to discharge, substantiate that Respondent Employer independently violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. I so find.

3. The 28 August layoff

Virtually from its inception, rumors of layoff had circulated throughout the project. On Friday, 28 August, shortly after their coffeebreak, Murray was tipped off by an ironworker steward that he and Grubb would be laid off. When Murray sought confirmation from Satterfield, the latter stated that he knew nothing, but indicated that he would investigate. Later Satterfield returned, confirming that Grubb and Murray were affected. When Satterfield was unable to furnish a reason, Murray and Grubb sought out McMillan, who confirmed their inclusion. Murray argued to McMillan that it made no sense, as he was a leadman and had done quite a bit of work. McMillan allegedly responded that the layoff was decided by Waller and Evans, it already had been arranged and he had nothing to say about it. At this point, Murray mentioned the Kentucky men and apprentices, and others hired after him, asking whether they would be retained. McMillan is alleged to have replied that "all" were staying, adding that he had no complaint about Murray's work, but that Waller and Evans "decided that you would be gone."[17]

Murray then sought out Waller. He confronted him stating, "I understand I am being laid off." Waller said "that is correct." When Murray asked what was going on, Waller allegedly replied, "Well, I told you, if you're going to bitch together, you're go down the road together." Waller allegedly added that he had had enough, that he was running the job, and that he would make the decisions. Murray injected that he did not agree with those decisions. Waller said that if he had any complaints, to take them up with Evans, who had already okayed the layoff.[18]

That evening, Murray called the union hall several times, but could not reach Evans. On Monday morning, he went to the hall with Grubb, Halley, and Monteneri. Evans again was unavailable. He alleges that he informed the Union's secretary that they wished to grieve their layoff. Moreover, being dissatisfied with the secretary's effort to contact Evans, Murray told her to advise Evans that they would take the matter to the National Labor Relations Board and the Union's district council. With her permission, he then telephoned the NLRB in Cincinnati, Ohio, to request forms for filing unfair labor practice charges.

In analyzing the issues of discrimination, it is first observed that the General Counsel's proof does not support a reasonably based inference that the overall layoff, even partially, was founded on prescribed considerations. There is not a scintilla to suggest that the Respondent Employer eliminated seven innocent workers, including a foreman, two ironworkers and an operating engineer, to mask its interest in eliminating the four alleged discriminatees. In this posture, the General Counsel is relegated to proving that Murray, Grubb, Halley, and Monten-be used to perform millwright work. I believed Evans. In passing, it is noteworthy that Monteneri added several incriminating details, which were unconfirmed from other sources. First, he averred that Dillon stated that Evans had approved the use of operating engineers to perform millwright's work. Second he stated that Satterfield rejected the jurisdictional complaint, advising the men not to make waves. I did not believe Monteneri.

---

[14] It is the sense of Grubb's testimony that he did not accompany Murray when the latter confronted Waller and/or Satterfield concerning the operating engineers.

[15] Alleged discriminatee Homer Halley did not testify. He was described as simply "standing there" during this incident. He was not identified as having taken an active role in this any other incident litigated in this proceeding.

[16] Monteneri and Grubb confirm that Waller this latter remark. Waller, made though actively on payroll status at the time of the hearing (see Res. Emp. Exh. 6), was not called as a witness. Despite misgivings concerning the credulity of Murray, Grubb, and Monteneri, considering the import of the remark attributed to Waller and his apparent availability, it is fair to infer that, if called, his testimony would not have supported the Employer's interest. I also reject the denial that Waller, though general foreman, was not a supervisor. There is ample basis for deeming his actions to be binding on the Employer. Waller reported directly to Superintendent McMillan, and with the possible exception of the key man, was second in command on the project. Other foreman reported to Waller, received assignments from him, and he was responsible for the faithful discharge of duties by supervisors and rank-and-file workers within his jurisdiction. He was consulted concerning the employees to be retained in the event of a layoff and he clearly exercised independent judgment in the assignment of work and the direction of the work force. It is concluded that General Foreman Waller was a supervisor within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act.

[17] Grubb's version indicated that McMillan named Waller and Evans as having "made the layoff list." Monteneri, who did not witness the conversation, relates that in a separate conversation with Waller, he was referred to Evans to explain his inclusion because it was Evans who made out the list. The testimony of all three was considered untruthful.

[18] Grubb testified that he was not in a position to hear heated aspects of the conversation between Murray and Waller. As I understand Grubb's account, Waller did explain his selection, referring to a prior warning issued Grubb that he would be terminated if he persisted in talking too much on the job—a ground that I consider to involve misconduct, distinct from any form of protected activity.

eri were victims of discriminatory selection in the course of an otherwise legitimate, economic layoff.

Concerning Case 9–CB–6857, there is no primary evidence that the Respondent Union participated in any aspect of the layoff decision. The hearsay evidence offered through Murray, Grubb, and Monteneri does implicate the Union in that process, but even if believed, their testimony does not link with other competent proof establishing a rational circumstantial probability that Evans or any other union representative had any influence on the determination to let the alleged discriminatees go.[19] Accordingly, credible, probative evidence that the Respondent Union caused, or attempted to cause, any discrimination involved here, is lacking, and the 8(b)(2) allegations in this regard shall be dismissed.

Nonetheless, the General Counsel has substantiated a prima facie violation of 8(a)(3) and (1) in Respondent Employer's selection of Murray, Grubb, and Monteneri.[20] Against the background of prior complaints concerning contract issues, General Foreman Tom Waller, 2 days before the layoff, reacted with the comment that if the men were "going to bitch together," they could "go down the road together." This expression of animus, in context, is linked sufficiently to the protected concerted activity of Murray, Monteneri, and Grubb, to warrant the inference that their selection was founded, at least in part, on unlawful considerations. In these circumstances, the burden shifts and a finding of proscribed discrimination will only be allayed on proof that all three would have been included even had they engaged in no activity protected by the Act. See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083, 1089 (1980); NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393, 401 (1983).

In this regard, Superintendent McMillan testified that he alone determined those to be included in the layoff. He avers that the process began on Monday, 17 August, when he requested that Bleemel, his key man, and General Foreman Waller name those they wished to keep. At the time, 40 millwrights were employed, and McMillan, on receiving these recommendations, still had several selections to make on his own. McMillan claims to have made the final choice later in the week of 17 August based on (1) his personal on-the-job observations, (2) ongoing comments from other foremen concerning job performance,[21] and (3) the need for the particular millwright or crew, considering the work they were doing in relation to that required and ready for performance at the time.[22]

Apart from their earlier employment on the belt crew, no attempt was made to explain how or why Murray or Grubb were selected under the aforedescribed criteria. Beyond that, McMillan testified that it was difficult to distinguish between journeymen millwrights because all possessed the skills of their craft. In this light, his characterization of Murray as "one of the better workers on the job," together with his admission that work remained on the job that Murray was capable of performing actually enforces the inference of discrimination that emerges from the case-in-chief. Indeed, McMillan admitted that Bleemel named Murray as among those to be retained. Despite this, and for unexplainable reasons, McMillan still included Murray in the layoff. His doing so gives rise to an incongruity sufficiently serious to bring reality to Waller's prophesy that the men would "go down the road together."[23] Accordingly, it is concluded that, as Respondent Employer has failed to demonstrate that Murray or Grubb would have been selected for layoff, even had they declined to compel compliance with the collective-bargaining agreement, their terminations on 28 August violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.[24] The opposite conclusion is reached in the case of Monteneri, an apprentice. In his case, McMillan testified that Monteneri was the sole alleged discriminatee singled out by a foreman (Waller) as a candidate for termination. Since the latter's job inadequacies were confirmed by Murray, in this instance, I am willing to give benefit of the doubt to McMillan and based on his testimony that negative recommendations by foremen were considered, it is concluded that Monteneri would have been selected [19] On this record, the parol testimony is not enhanced by any objective, impartial evidence suggesting that the Union spurned its traditional responsibilities in order to align itself with Employer efforts to repress complaints by its members. Here, the controversy generated by workers on this project was not so unusual as to imply that the Union might have been distracted from its rontine representational duties. In fact, based on the credited testimony of Satterfield and Evans, it is concluded that steps were taken to achieve a favorable resolution of each complaint, and compliance was achieved in all cases except the crew/foreman ratio issue, the jurisdictional dispute, the use of out-of-state millwrights did not develop into a genuine issue until after the layoff. The dispute concerning the crew/foreman ratio involved a mere $12. The provision of welding hoods, according to the Union, was not the Employer's responsibility, and the contract does not suggest that this interpretation was in error. With respect to any misuse of operating engineers, it does not appear that following Evans' demands in that regard, the Employer engaged in further intrusion on the Union's craft jurisdiction. On balance, there is no inherent basis for inferring that the Union reacted adversely to the jobsite conduct of the employees involved in this proceeding, and the credited facts are to the contrary.

[20] The 8(a)(3) and 8(b)(2) allegations involving Halley are dismissed as unsupported by evidence that the Employer had knowledge or a basis for believing that he engaged in any conduct protected by the Act. Indeed, there was no proof that he had in fact done so. Halley's standing on the evidence in this case is no different than the seven laid-off employees not mentioned in the instant complaint. In other words, the General Counsel has failed to establish that the selection of Halley, to any conceivable extent, was prompted by Section 7 activity.

[21] The front line foremen were not interviewed by McMillan as part of this process and they did not participate directly therein.

[22] It was my impression that counsel for the Employer made a more energetic attempt to explain the terminations on this last ground than his witness, McMillan. It is true that phase one of the project was drawing to a close at the time and, according to McMillan, the "majority" of the belting had been completed for that phase. However, although he testified that Murray, Monteneri, and Grubb were on the belt crew, he went on to testify that "they were out of the belt crew at the time of the layoff." Thus, completion of the belt work does not furnish an unambiguous, nondiscriminatory explanation for their selection. McMillan's failure to explain why, or even whether the precise work these individuals were doing at the time of layoff was dispensable is a crucial flaw in the defense. In Murray's case, the breakdown in proof was underscored by McMillan's inability, when subsequently asked, to provide any specific reason for terminating Murray, instead implying that it was quite accidental.

[23] Respondent Employer contends that Waller's threatening remark could not have influenced the layoff since the selections were made prior thereto. The persuasiveness testimony that he actually did not draft the list or communicate the names to headquarters until 26 or 27 August.

[24] McMillan's conclusionary testimony that he was not influenced by the concerted activity is rejected as unbelievable in the total circumstances.

for layoff even if he had not engaged in activity of a protected nature. Hence, the 8(a)(3) and (1) allegations in his case shall be dismissed.

4. The 8(b)(1)(A) allegations

The complaint alleged that, prior to the layoff, Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A), through Satterfield's alleged threats that employees would lose employment because they questioned compliance with the governing collective-bargaining agreement. This allegation is dismissed as unsubstantiated by credible evidence. Satterfield believably related that he pursued all issues raised by Murray, Grubb, and Monteneri, had several resolved, and those not within this category were passed on to Evans. Based on all the evidence, it struck as entirely unlikely that the steward, either alone or under direction by the business agent would react with such hostility toward efforts by longstanding union members to enforce the contract. I did not believe the testimony of Murray, Grubb, and Monteneri that they were told to either withhold complaints or find other work and hence the 8(b)(1)(A) allegation based thereon shall be dismissed.

The complaint also alleged that the Union declined to accept grievances under the contract. This allegation is vaguely phrased, lacking identification of union agents involved, the grievances in question, or the specific timeframe when grievances were rejected. Insofar as addressed to Steward Satterfield, it is concluded that he did not unlawfully interfere with any employee's access, including that of Murray, to the contractual grievance machinery. In so finding, it is noted that credible evidence does not exist indicating that he was solicited by any employee to file a grievance concerning the layoff. On direct examination, Murray testified that on 28 August, after Satterfield notified him that he was included in the layoff, he and Grubb went to McMillan's office. He claims that he then went to discuss the matter with Waller. There is no indication during his examination-in-chief that he met with Satterfield to protest the layoff before he left the job that day. On redirect, however, after leading examination by counsel for the General Counsel, Murray testified that he "specifically" requested that Satterfield grieve his layoff, but then recanted: "I don't know if I got right down and said I'm filing a grievance in writing or not." Satterfield denied that any protest was lodged with him by Murray regarding the layoff. Based on Satterfield's credited denial, I find that Satterfield did not refuse to accept or process any grievance concerning the 28 August layoff. Nor is there testimony that Satterfield, prior to the layoff, was requested to file a formal grievance with respect to any of the miscellany of issues raised during that timeframe. Thus, the General Counsel's claim of illegality in this latter respect is premised on the notion that union agents shoulder a duty to equate carping with a formal request for invocation of the grievance process. I am unaware of any policy that would support imposition of such a burden on a labor organization, or its representatives. On the contrary, a requirement that employees make their intention clear is hardly onerous. In this light, as the evidence does not disclose that Satterfield was so apprised in this case, there is no basis for concluding that Respondent Union, through Satterfield, declined to accept or process a grievance in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.[25]

The remaining 8(b)(1)(A) allegations are attributed to Business Agent Evans. In support it is argued that, during the period following the layoff, Evans: (1) threatened employees with loss of unemployment compensation if they persisted in protesting their layoff, (2) physically assaulted an employee because of his declared intent to file unfair labor practice charges, and (3) threatened an employee with loss of work unless he desisted from pursuing intraunion or unfair labor practice charges.

The initial act of alleged coercion took place in the course of a regularly scheduled, monthly union meeting held on Tuesday, September 1. Murray took the floor to downdress Evans, stating that he felt that the rules and bylaws had been routinely violated on the Ziniz job and that he had been approached by himself and other members to take corrective measures. Evans allegedly responded that there was nothing that could be done. Murray aserts that he then asked Evans to investigate the layoff, observing that he thought that they were laid off improperly.[26] Murray avers that he next told Evans that McMillan had indicated that they were temporarily laid off due to lack of materials but that Murray did not believe that this was so.[27] Evans then offered that Ziniz was trying to clear out the deadwood. However, Evans indicated that Murray did not fall into that category, but was selected for the following reason: "your problem is you bitch too much . . . you create dissension on the job . . . that's why you're being laid off, the man is trying to get rid of you for creating union problems."

The General Counsel appears to contend that in the course of the meeting Murray made a fruitless effort to perfect a grievance. Though not evident in his initial narrative, Murray testified that he did so at the 1 September union meeting by instructing Evans to grieve the layoff under the contract and to investigate the matter to hear-

[25] I did not believe Murray's testimony that he made a specific request to file a grievance to a clerical employee of the Union during a visit to the union hall on Monday, 31 August. The clerical employee is unidentified and there is no allegation that the individual in question was an agent of Respondent for any purpose. In any event, in rejecting Murray's testimony, I note his assertion that he was accompanied that day by Grubb, Halley, and Monteneri. Only Monteneri gave testimony tending to corroborate Murray, and he was not examined as to exactly what the secretary was told. More importantly Monteneri's effort at corroboration must be evaluated in light of his testimony on direct examination that he did not visit the union hall until the following Tuesday. Whatever the case, neither Murray nor Monteneri struck me as a reliable witness and their testimony was only accepted where enforced by reliable sources or outside probabilities.

[26] Although Murray assailed Foreman Waller after learning that the latter participated in his selection, he apparently did not confront Evans with the information he allegedly possessed that Evans also had participated in the preparation of the layoff list.

[27] Note that Murray's version of his terminal conversation with McMillan denied that McMillan gave any reason for the layoff. Instead Murray at that time testified that, when Murray requested an explanation, McMillan declined to give one, but simply stated that he had nothing to do with the decision.

ing under the grievance procedure.[28] According to Murray, Evans grinned, but did not say whether he would or he would not take that step. In contrast, Evans testified that, prior to the 6 October union meeting neither Murray, nor anyone else, requested that he file a grievance concerning the layoff.[29] As I prefer the testimony of Evans, and as the obligation to process a grievance does not arise until the employee specifically expresses such an intention, the 8(b)(1)(A) allegation, to the extent based on any claim that Evans refused to accept grievances, shall be dismissed as unsubstantiated by credible proof that such action was ever sought by any employee.[30]

An additional 8(b)(1)(A) allegation attributed to Evans during the course of this meeting is founded on Murray's testimony that Evans warned at that time that if the employees wanted to bitch about it "Mr. McMillan had agreed to hire us back, work us 2 days and fire us all."[31]

Evans admitted to a similar, but substantively different statement. Thus, he recalls having told the men that their layoff entitled them to unemployment, but that if the Union forced their reinstatement, the Employer could keep them for a few days and then fire them under conditions precluding unemployment benefit eligibility. Evans swore that this possibility was of his own invention, that it was hypothetical, and that McMillan had not stated that he would take any such action. I believed Evans, and based on his credited testimony, it is concluded that no coercive behavior might be ascribed to the Union through this effort to convince those affected that matters could be worse. Accordingly, the 8(b)(1)(A) allegation that employees were in any sense coerced by these remarks is dismissed.

The complaint alleges a further 8(b)(1)(A) allegation based on Evans alleged physical assault on 12 September of employees because they intended to file unfair labor practice charges. On that date, the Union sponsored a picnic. Murray attended with his wife and children. Early in the afternoon, Evans visited with Murray and his family. During a cordial conversation, Evans stated that he wished that Murray would drop the whole matter. The latter indicated that he could not do so, and that he wanted the district council to make a decision concerning whether Evans was properly enforcing the contract. Evans attempted to reason with Murray by explaining that the Union was in the process of a reorganization that could enhance Evans' authority, but that the exposure of Murray's charges would prejudice this opportunity. Murray next raised the possibility that a deal could be made, asking whether Evans was prepared to make concessions to him and his crew. Evans angrily indicated that he would make no concessions, but that if Murray dropped the charges, he would let Murray keep his health. When Murray asked if he was serious, Evans indicated that if Murray did not forget it and drop all the NLRB and union charges he would whip him right then and there. Murray then said that he had the papers right in his truck and had made up his mind to go ahead and file them. Subsequently, Murray went to his truck, obtained the papers, brought them to the picnic table, where he, together with Grubb and Monteneri signed them. According to Murray, during the afternoon, Evans came by several times, at one point telling Murray that he was going to wipe the floor up with him. According to Murray, each time Evans came by he became more "adamant about the fact that he was going to beat up Murray if he did not drop the charges."

Later, a fight did in fact break out. Monteneri, however, was a principal. On his own account, Murray got involved as a peacemaker, prevailing on the participants to resolve their differences, later when sober, at the union hall. Indeed, when another millwright, Jesse Thomas, and Evans each grabbed one of Monteneri's wrists, Murray intervened grabbing Evans' wrist stating "dammit, boys, let's just settle this at the union hall . . . you know, this is not the place . . . somebody's going to get hurt here, once this gets started." At this point, Evans' wife came running towards the men and jumped between them, attempting to kick Monteneri in the groin. She then grabbed Murray's hair, whereupon Murray's wife grabbed Mrs. Evans by the hair, and when another woman jumped in, it was Evans who became the peacemaker. But as Evans grabbed Mrs. Murray and attempted to drag her away she hit him in the nose, breaking his glasses.

As this chapter drew to a close, Mrs. Evans struck Murray in the back with a wooden food stirrer, and when he grabbed it, she bit his fingers severely. Evans' daughter then threatened Murray's wife with a beer bottle. And when an identified friend intervened on behalf of the daughter, Murray knocked him down twice.

Before leaving, Murray once more was approached by Evans who again demanded that Murray drop the intraunion and unfair labor practice charges. Murray said no, whereupon Evans then observed, "by God, we've got a problem." Murray challenged that if that was the way Evans felt, he could take a swing at Murray. Evans apparently declined, and Murray gathered up his family and left.[32]

[28] Murray's testimony in this respect was elicited through a prejudicially leading question, a fact that is all the more crucial when one considers my basic doubts concerning his veracity.

[29] Art. 11 of the collective-bargaining agreement requires a grievance to be filed within 48 hours of the occurrence, excluding Saturdays and Sundays. Thus, an employee who would invoke that process, at a minimum, must act within that timeframe. From all appearances, the requirement would have been met had Murray perfected his demand at the union meeting.

[30] Evans testified that he received a telephone call from Murray on Tuesday morning, 1 September, in which Murray disputed the Company's right to retain out-of-state millwrights while laying off local men. This was Evans' first contact with Murray after the layoff. Although the contract imposed no restraints on the Employer's discretion either in layoff selection or recall, Evans supported Murray's view and protested to McMillan, but to no avail.

[31] Monteneri did not attend the meeting, but met with Evans earlier that day. According to Monteneri, Evans told him that McMillan had informed Evans that if the men continued to bitch, that they would hire the men back for 2 days, and then fire them.

[32] Prior to the picnic, Murray had filed no charges. Thereafter, he filed internal union charges against Waller, Satterfield, Evans, and Dillon. The charges against Dillon were dropped, but those against Evans, Waller, and Satterfield were processed and were to be heard on 13 January 1988. The unfair labor practice charge, though apparently signed at the picnic, was not actually filed on 18 September 1987.

Monteneri testified that he did not arrive at the picnic until 5:30 p.m. He claims that they were having a great time, that they signed the charges, and that the charges went unmentioned until about 9:30 p.m. At that time, Evans approached Monteneri and told him that he was "trying to get him in trouble." Monteneri denied that this was his intent, arguing that if Evans had run the job right, the men would not have had to file charges. Evans then attacked Monteneri's ability as a worker, calling on millwright Jesse Duncan for support. The latter described Monteneri as "worthless."[33] Monteneri countered with an attack on Duncan's competence, and their argument continued until Evans grabbed Monteneri's arm, because it appeared that Monteneri and Duncan were on the verge of fisticuffs. According to Monteneri, Evans at that juncture was intoxciated and angry and, though attempting to separate him from Duncan, Evans threatened Monteneri "if we didn't straighten things out right then and there . . . drop the charges . . . I'm going to kick your ass." At this juncture, Murray intervened to quell the disturbance, but failed due to the intrusion of Mrs. Evans.

According to Monteneri, after the donnybrook involving the women ended, Evans asked him to leave. He replied:

> . . . I didn't start this fight . . . your wife started this fight and as far as I'm concerned she can leave.

Evans, angered by this remark, stated "come on, big boy, I'm going to whip your ass right where you stand." A fight ensued, but only after Monteneri and Evans returned to the parking lot. After getting the best of Evans, Monteneri left, with the former still echoing, "I'm going to kick your ass big boy."

The sole allegation in the complaint pertaining to the picnic specifies that Evans "physically assaulted" employees because they "expressed their intent to file charges with the National Labor Relations Board."[34] The General Counsel's witnesses, namely, Grubb and Monteneri, both related that fights were brewing well prior to the altercations described above, a state of events having nothing to do with internal or external charges against union officials. Monteneri and Murray, the sole witnesses to their confrontations with Evans, testified to numerous threats of harm by the latter, but did not relate either directly, or by implication that they were assaulted because of activity of a protected nature. On their own testimony, the first assault was initiated by Mrs. Evans and the second by Monteneri's refusal to leave the premises. Accordingly, the evidence does not substantiate that Evans assaulted any employee in consequence of activity of a protected nature. Nonetheless, as Evans did not refute the entirely plausible testimony that he repeatedly threatened Monteneri and Murray with physical harm if they did not drop the unfair labor practice and intraunion charges, both of which actions constituted activity protected by the Act, it is concluded that Respondent-Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.[35]

The final allegation of the complaint is to the effect that Evans, on 14 September, threatened an employee with loss of work unless he agreed to drop all charges. This allegation is founded on Murray's testimony that, while at the union hall, he discussed the charges with Evans, who stated that this was the main thing on his mind, that they would have to be dropped, and that they would mess up his future. Evans allegedly made his point by stating that if Murray wanted to work steady, to have the opportunity to be designated as steward or foreman, and to avoid problems, he "would have to drop them."[36] Evans testified that he discussed the unfair labor practice charges with Murray on 17 September. At that time, Murray brought the signed unfair labor practice charges to his office, warning Evans that they would be filed if Evans did not get him reinstated on the Ziniz job. Evans allegedly responded that he had done all he could legally accomplish, and the filing of unfair labor practice charges was Murray's prerogative. According to Evans it was in this conversation that the Allied Riggers recovery was mentioned, with Evans stating that Murray's action and recovery against that firm had caused a hardship on the members because Allied Riggers, since, has avoided use of the Union's hiring hall. Evans' testimony in this respect was addressed to the only conversation within the timeframe mentioned in the complaint. His account implicitly refutes any threat related to the charges, and his testimony is preferred to that of Murray. Beyond that there was neither allegation, nor conclusive litigation of any unfair labor practices in December. Accordingly, the allegation that Evans threatened Murray with reprisals in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) in this respect shall be dismissed.

---

[33] Monteneri testified that earlier that evening he observed Duncan and Evans at the brink of fisticuffs.

[34] Having canvassed the record, I have been unable to locate an amendment to the complaint challenging the legality of Evans' threats of bodily harm. Thus, a material variance with the pleadings is presented, which calls into play the Board's longstanding policy that unalleged unfair labor practices may be remedied, but only if fully litigated. Here, there was no attempt to litigate an evidentiary defense. However, Respondent-Union not only failed to interpose a procedural objection, but countered with a substantive argument that the threats did not relate to activity within the purview of Section 7 of the Act. In this light, it is concluded, allbeit reluctantly, that the issue of coercive threats is viable as having been fully litigated.

[35] There is no merit in the Union's legal contention that no violation inured because "the threats were related to the Internal Union charges that Monteneri and Murray were mentioning." This difference does not alter the result. Under the precedent, the distinct remedies available under the National Labor Relations Act are not displaced merely because the employee conduct is also protected by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act. (See, e.g., Steelworkers Local 5163 (Charles A. Bizzaro), 248 NLRB 943, and cases cited at 944 (1980). Moreover, even if the precedent were otherwise, the threats attributed to Evans transcended internal disciplinary procedures and remained unlawful because broad enough to restrain employee access to the National Labor Relations Board.

[36] Murray also averred that Evans telephoned him in December. In that conversation, Evans referred to the fact that Murray, in another unfair labor practice proceeding involving a local contractor, Allied Riggers, had been awarded $50,000 in backpay. Evans told Murray that because of this recovery, Murray had been collecting unemployment illegally, and that if the charges were not dropped, he would report Murray to the unemployment authorities. Evans allegedly also threatened to file internal disciplinary charges against Murray and to assess him $1000. Murray acknowledged that Evans also asserted that because of the Allied Riggers proceeding, he had encountered difficulty in getting that firm to hire employees through the Union.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Employer is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondent Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent Employer independently violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening to terminate employees because they invoked their collective-bargaining agreement and complained concerning their conditions of work.

4. Respondent Employer violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by terminating employees Bobby Lee Murray and Al Grubb because they complained concerning the failure to observe conditions of work set forth in the governing collective-bargaining agreement.

5. Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by threatening to physically harm employees unless they declined to process internal union and unfair labor practice charges.

6. The above unfair labor practices have an effect on commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

7. Except as found above, Respondent Employer and Respondent Union have not committed any unfair labor practices alleged herein.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Union and the Respondent Employer have coerced and restrained employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act, it shall be recommended that they be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and to take other affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent Employer violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by terminating employees Murray and Grubb, it shall be recommended that they be offered immediate reinstatement to their former positions, if in existence on the UPS job, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them from 28 August 1987 until a bona fide offer of reinstatement, or termination of all utilization of millwrights on that project, whichever occurs first.[37] Backpay under the terms of this Order shall be computed on a quarterly basis, as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), shall be reduced by net interim earnings, and shall include interest computed in accordance with New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).

Counsel for the General Counsel apparently has not yield on a request set forth in the complaint that the remedy include a visitatorial clause, authorizing the Board to engage in discovery if necessary to monitor compliance. The Board recently has announced that such a relief is only appropriate where warranted on the exigencies of a particular case. See Cherokee Marine Terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988). Here, there is neither showing nor argument suggesting that the specific conduct under scrutiny in this proceeding supports such relief. Accordingly, the request is denied.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[38]

ORDER

A. Respondent Ziniz, Inc., Louisville, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening to discharge employees who attempt to enforce terms and conditions of work set forth in a collective-bargaining agreement.

(b) Discouraging activity on behalf of the labor organization, by discharging, or in any other manner discriminating against employees, with respect to wages, hours, or terms and conditions of employment.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Bobby Lee Murray and Al Grubb, Jr. immediate reinstatement to their former positions, without prejudice to their seniority, or other rights and privileges, provided that those positions are still available, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(b) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its Louisville, Kentucky office and all jobsites within the territorial jurisidiction of Local 207, Millwrights and Piledrivers, affiliated with United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix A."[39] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being signed by the Respondent Employer's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent Employer immediately upon receipt, and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent Employer to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[37] Respondent Employer contended at the hearing that it objected to the recall of Murray in consequence of his threat addressed to General Foreman Waller. The impact of any such misconduct on the propriety of a remedial reinstatement provision has not been fully litigated, and represents a matter best resolved during compliance stages of this proceeding.

[38] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[39] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States Court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent Employer has taken to comply.

B. Respondent Local 207, Successor to Local 1241, Millwrights and Pile Drivers, a/w United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO, Columbus, Ohio, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening employees with physical harm because they have declared their intention to file, or have filed, either intraunion, or unfair labor practice charges.

(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at all meeting halls and places where notices to members or applicants for referral are posted copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[40] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being signed by the Respondent Union's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent Union immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent Union to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent Union has taken to comply.

[40] See fn. 39.

APPENDIX B

NOTICE TO MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with physical harm because they have declared their intentions to invoke internal union disciplinary procedures or to file unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

LOCAL 207, SUCCESSOR TO LOCAL 1241, MILLWRIGHTS AND PILEDRIVERS, A/W UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA, AFL–CIO

Cassidy Cleaning, Inc. and Michael Limes. Case 5–CA–17614

August 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On October 30, 1986, the National Labor Relations Board entered its Order[1] directing Cassidy Cleaning, Inc., among other actions, to make whole certain employees for any losses resulting from the Respondent's unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit enforced the Board's Order on December 21, 1987.[2] A controversy having arisen over the amount of backpay due under the Board's Order, the Regional Director for Region 5 on February 18, 1988, issued a backpay specification and notice of hearing alleging the amounts of backpay due and notifying the Respondent that it should file a timely answer. The Respondent failed to file an answer.

On April 8, 1988, the General Counsel filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. On April 13, 1988, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the General Counsel's motion should not be granted. The Respondent thereafter filed a response to the Notice to Show Cause.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.54 of the Board's Rules and Regulations provides that if an answer is not filed within 21 days from the service of the specification the Board may find the specification to be true.

The backpay specification states that the Respondent shall file an answer within 21 days from the date of service of the specification, and that if the answer fails to deny the specification's allegations in the manner required under the Board's Rules and Regulations, and the failure to do so is not adequately explained, the allegations shall be deemed to be true. Further, the undisputed allegations in the Motion for Summary Judgment disclose that on March 17, 1988, no answer having been received from the Respondent, the supervisory compliance officer sent a letter to the Respondent informing it that unless an answer to the specification was received by March 24, 1988, a Motion for Summary Judgment would be filed. The Respondent did not file an answer to the backpay specification within the required time, and the General Counsel moved for summary judgment. In its order transferring proceeding to the Board and Notice to Show Cause, issued April 13, 1988, the Board specified that the Respondent's written reply be filed with the Board in Washington, D.C., on or before April 27, 1988. The Respondent's reply, dated April 26, 1988, did not respond to any part of the backpay specification but raises, instead, an independent issue.

In its letter the Respondent notified the Board that due to the hardship placed on the Company by an Internal Revenue Service levy on the Company's finances it was unable to comply with the Board's Order to pay the back wages.

We find that the Respondent's bare assertion that it is unable to satisfy the backpay order because of hardship is an invalid defense. In a backpay proceeding the issue is the amount due and not whether the Respondent is able to pay.

The Respondent's reply to the Board's Notice to Show Cause does not specifically deny or respond in any way to the allegations of the backpay specification as required by Section 102.54(b) of the Board's Rules and Regulations. Moreover, its assertion of hardship does not constitute an adequate explanation of the Respondent's failure to file a timely answer to the backpay specification.[3] We find that the allegations of the backpay specification are therefore admitted as true.

In the absence of any explanation for the Respondent's failure to file a timely answer, we grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment.

Accordingly, the Board concludes that the net backpay due the discriminatees is as stated in the computations of the backpay specification, and orders the Respondent to pay those amounts to the discriminatees.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Cassidy Cleaning, Inc., Bethesda, Maryland, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, make whole each employee named below by paying the amounts set forth adjacent to their names, with interest computed in the manner prescribed in New Horizons for the Retarded,[4] and ac-

[1] Not reported in Board volumes.

[2] No. 87-3641.

[3] Star Grocery Co., 245 NLRB 196 (1979).

[4] 283 NLRB 1173 (1987). Interest on and after January 1, 1987, shall be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621. Interest on amounts accrued prior to January 1, 1987 (the effective date of the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621), shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

crued to date of payment, minus tax withholdings required by law.

James W. Dickens Jr.	$4125.49
Clarice D. Glover	1300.76
Michael E. Limes	2806.52
Branton L. Powell	3608.46
Bryant M. Robinson	5626.82
Gerald R. Scales	3056.15
Denise D. Seymour	6757.44
Karen Smith	8143.82
Sherry L. Walters	5228.37
James L. Washington	5118.10
Walter White	2883.24

Synergy Gas Corp. and Frank Depolito. Case 2–CA–22075

August 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 18, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Eleanor MacDonald issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Synergy Gas Corp., Cold Spring, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.[2]

In paragraph 1(b), change "concerted activities" to "union activities."

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] The notice need not be modified as it conforms to the change we have made in the language of the Order.

Richard L. DeSteno, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Elliot J. Mandel, Esq. (Kaufman, Frank, Schneider & Rosensweig, P.C.), of New York, New York, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ELEANOR MACDONALD, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried in New York, New York, and Cold Spring, New York, on 5 days between 23 June and 4 August 1987. The complaint alleges that Respondent, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, interrogated its employees concerning their union activities and discharged employee Frank DePolito because he joined the Union. Respondent denies the material allegations of the complaint and alleges that DePolito was a manager of the Company and that he was discharged for misconduct.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and Respondent in October 1987, I make the following[1]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a domestic corporation with an office in Farmingdale, New York, and a facility in Cold Spring, New York, provides bottled propane gas and maintenance service on gas lines and appliances.[2] Annually, Respondent purchases products valued in excess of $50,000 directly in interstate commerce. Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that Local 456, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

The uncontradicted testimony of all the witnesses taken together shows that Synergy Gas Corp. was an organization dedicated to expanding its area of operations. In August 1985, Synergy hired Frank DePolito as a serviceman for its approximately 23 propane gas customers in the area of Cold Spring, New York. DePolito worked out of his home in Cold Spring; an answering machine on his telephone took messages from Synergy's customers. DePolito drove to Synergy's branch in Parsippany, New Jersey, to pick up propane gas and other supplies as he needed them. DePolito parked the Synergy truck in a lot behind a local hardware store. The Cold Spring branch was designated as 4075.

At various times, Synergy employed other employees to work with DePolito. Their hirings and firings will be discussed below.

DePolito was supervised by Philip Nicolette, the area manager of Synergy. Nicolette spoke to DePolito many times per week on the telephone and came to Cold Spring to see DePolito several times per month. In addition, DePolito saw Nicolette at the Parsippany branch on occasion.[3] DePolito also received messages about customer calls from dispatcher Ray Vanderhoof of the Parsippany branch.

DePolito began work as an hourly paid employee earning $10.50 per hour. On 26 November 1985, Nicolette wrote to the vice president of operations, John Russell, to the effect that DePolito had been diligent in acquiring new accounts and asking that DePolito be paid

[1] Due to an error by the official court reporter in binding the exhibits in the instant case, a certain confusion has arisen. I note that the following exhibits were identified but were not received into evidence: R. 5, 11, 12, and 15a,b,c.

[2] Respondent's executive offices are in Farmingdale. Other facilities are scattered throughout the Northeast.

[3] Nicolette is responsible for about 32 branches of Synergy in New York and New England. His office is in Parsippany, New Jersey.

commissions on his new sales. Nicolette mentioned that DePolito needed more money to pay the hospital bills connected with the recent birth of his daughter. The letter closed with the statement that it was Nicolette's "intent to have Frank as our manager in Cold Spring [sic] when that plant requires." On 20 December 1985, Nicolette again wrote to Russell, this time to request that DePolito be granted a salary of $25,000 per annum. Nicolette pointed out that DePolito had been working long hours 6 days per week and stated, "I feel Frank has proven to me he is more than qualified to be a manager." This raise was granted by Synergy.

Synergy had no facility for storing propane gas in the Cold Spring area. If it was to expand the number of its accounts, the Company required a nearby plant so that its employees would not have to make the 2-hour drive to Parsippany for gas and other supplies. The Company made efforts to acquire property and secure a permit to build a storge tank in Cold Spring. DePolito was involved in these efforts because he was eager to advance his future with the Company as the head of an expanding branch. However, Synergy was unable to obtain a permit to build a plant with a propane storage tank, and eventually it decide to buy a going concern with an existing storage facility.

On 29 October 1986, Synergy purchased Economy Gas in Cold Spring from its owner, Wayne Bumstead. Contrary to his expectations, DePolito did not become the branch manager of the new facility; instead, Bumstead was asked to remain as manager and run the business. Bumstead received a yearly salary of $23,000. In addition, he had received a down payment of $35,000 from Synergy for the purchase of Economy Gas and he held a 10-year mortgage on the facility to secure future quarterly payments until the full purchase price of $440,000 had been paid.

In October 1986, Economy Gas consisted of a yard, storage facilities, and a house which contained a tiny office. The office had a desk for Bumstead's use, a counter to be used by other employees, and facilities for a secretary. Bumstead's residence was above the office. Economy Gas had about 1000 customer accounts which were taken over by Synergy. The employees of Economy Gas now worked for Synergy; these were Bumstead, Glen Pennachio, and secretary Paulette Pennachio, his sister. DePolito and Randy Collazo, Synergy's old employees, now worked out of the new Synergy facility in Cold Spring. The new facility was designated branch 4076.

By 18 November 1986, according to Nicolette, DePolito was complaining that Bumstead did not know how to run the business and was losing customers. DePolito also told Nicolette on 13 January 1987 that Bumstead's failure to dispatch employees properly had caused missed deliveries to Metro North, a major client. In turn, Bumstead complained about DePolito to Nicolette; he told Nicolette that DePolito made "arrogant comments" and that DePolito and Collazo were wasting time.

The instant case arises out of DePolito's discharge by Nicolette on 4 February 1987.

B. Credibility of the Witnesses

Nicolette testified on behalf of Respondent concerning all the issues in the instant case. He refreshed his memory as to dates and events from his daily diary while on the witness stand. Nicolette testified that the descriptions of events noted in his diary were written down soon after they occurred and were accurate. Nicolette had used the diary to prepare for his appearance at the trial here and it was clear that he relied on the diary for his recollection about many of the relevant events. Unfortunately, Nicolette's diary and his memory were shown to be inaccurate. For example, Nicolette testified that on 19 January 1987, when he had no trouble making the lengthy trip from Parsippany to Cold Spring despite a recent snowfall, DePolito had called Bumstead to say he was snowed in and could not work. This testimony purported to show that DePolito was not a dedicated employee. In fact, DePolito had notified Bumstead several days before January that his daughter was scheduled for surgery that day, and Bumstead had told DePolito to take the day off. DePolito had not called Synergy on January to say he was snowbound.[4] Nevertheless Nicolette's diary clearly shows a note for 19 January 1987 that DePolito was snowed in. The diary and Nicolette's testimony are thus inaccurate. Further, Nicolette gave detailed testimony about telephone calls made to him by DePolito and Bumstead on 3 February 1987 the day before Nicolette discharged DePolito. Nicolette stated that DePolito and Bumstead called him in Vermont at 10 and 11 a.m., respectively, to describe an altercation that had just taken place between them. Nicolette's diary supports this version of the events. However, the documentary evidence as well as the testimony of all the other witnesses called on this point by both Respondent and the General Counsel shows that the telephone calls were made at the end of the work day after 4 p.m. Nicolette testified that in order to surprise DePolito, whom he claimed to have found to be devious, he told DePolito he would be in Cold Spring in 2 days on 5 February, when, in fact, he intended to be there the next day, 4 February, and so informed Bumstead. However, Bumstead's testimony as well as Nicolette's diary show that Nicolette intended to be in Cold Spring on 5 February but changed his mind after speaking to Depolito and Bumstead. Thus, the elaborate story about planning to surprise DePolito was shown to be contrary to fact. There are other similar examples in the record which convince me that both Nicolette's testimony and his diary are unreliable, but I shall not detail all of them. Further, I observed that Nicolette was uncooperative on cross-examination. Due to my findings, I shall not rely on Nicolette's testimony where it is disputed.

Wayne Bumstead testified on behalf of Respondent. Bumstead contradicted Nicolette in certain important respects. Thus, while Nicolette admitted that Bumstead told him that employee Glen Pennachio mentioned signing a union card, Bumstead denied telling Nicolette. Further, Bumstead changed his testimony about whether he and Nicolette discussed DePolito's union activities when [4] A copy of the hospital bill for the surgery was entered into evidence.

DePolito was discharged. I shall not credit Bumstead's testimony where it is contradicted by more reliable evidence.

Stanley Sather and Robert Crissey testified on behalf of Respondent. I shall credit their testimony.

Frank DePolito testified on behalf of the General Counsel. DePolito's testimony was consistent and in accord with the documentary evidence. DePolito's testimony sucessfully withstood a vigorous cross-examination, I shall credit it.

Randy Collazo testified on behalf of the General Counsel. Collazo is still an employee of Respondent. Although in a vulnerable position, Collazo answered readily and was cooperative on cross-examination. I shall credit Collazo's testimony.

Paulette Pennachio testified on behalf of Respondent. About some matters, she was less knowledgeable than the witnesses who had participated directly in the events at issue. Furthermore, Pennachio has worked for Bumstead for over 9 years and was personally loyal to him; this fact caused her to shade her testimony. However, I shall credit her testimony on matters about which she had direct knowledge.

C. Supervisory Issue

Respondent argues that DePolito was a supervisor when he was discharged in February 1987. Respondent asserts that DePolito had been manager of branch 4075 when it operated out of DePolito's home, and that when Economy Gas was purchased by Synergy, Bumstead became branch manager and DePolito became service manager of branch 4076.

Three drivers were employed to assist DePolito: Stanley Sather from late 1985, until 13 February 1986, Robert Tobin from 12 February, until sometime in the spring of 1986, and Randy Collazo beginning on 12 May 1986. DePolito and Sather had known each other for about 10 years when DePolito told Sather there might be a job for him at Synergy Gas. DePolito told Sather he could have the job but that he would have to speak to Nicolette first. DePolito and Sather drove to Parsippany and met with Nicolette in his office. Nicolette told Sather about Synergy's operations, procedures, and the accounts he would have to familiarize himself with. Sather filled out an employment application form at Nicolette's desk and then Nicolette told Sather he had the job with Synergy. Sather testified that DePolito fired him without giving him a reason: DePolito came to his house and asked for the keys to the truck. DePolito credibly testified that Nicolette instructed him to fire Sather because Sather had failed to come to Parsippany to pick up a truck. Nicolette gave DePolito a termination slip and told him how to fill it out. Pursuant to Nicolette's instructions, DePolito put "lack of performance" as the reason for termination and signed the form as branch manager. According to DePolito, Tobin was a friend of his.[5] After telling Tobin about the job, DePolito took Tobin to Parsippany to meet Nicolette. DePolito signed Tobin's new employee form as "branch manager." DePolito testified that Tobin was out sick with the flu for 1 week and Nicolette fired him although DePolito did not want to discharge Tobin. After Tobin's termination, Nicolette told DePolito to advertise in the newspaper for a new driver; Randy Collazo answered the advertisement. He was interviewed by DePolito and filled out an application form which DePolito signed as "employment manager." Then DePolito told Collazo that they would have to go see Nicolette in Parsippany. On 12 May 1986, DePolito and Collazo saw Nicolette in Parsippany. Nicolette reviewed Collazo's application form and asked about his prior work experience. Nicolette told Collazo he was hired. Collazo filled out a new employee form which DePolito signed as "branch manager."

At some point, DePolito grew dissatisfied with Collazo and told Nicolette that he should be discharged. But Nicolette said that he thought Collazo had potential and should be kept on. DePolito introduced Nicolette to another potential driver identified as "Steve." However, after Nicolette interviewed Steve he decided that Steve was a "hustler" and would not be a good employee. Nicolette told DePolito not to hire Steve.

From the summary given above, it is not at all clear that DePolito had the authority to hire and fire employees while he was in charge of branch 4075. I am not pursuaded that he had the authority effectively to recommend the hiring and firing of employees; Nicolette always interviewed DePolito's prospective drivers and told the men they actually had the job. Moreover, Nicolette told DePolito to fire Sather and Nicolette himself fired Tobin. Finally, Nicolette vetoed DePolito's wish to fire Collazo and hire Steve.

Before Synergy Gas took over Economy Gas and Bumstead became branch manager, DePolito handled all the paperwork for branch 4075. He submitted timesheets to the payroll office in Parsippany for himself and the driver and he submitted customer records to Parsippany for billing. The testimony shows that DePolito had the authority to approve time off for the driver. DePolito spoke to Nicolette on the telephone often concerning the Cold Spring operation. The record is unclear about DePolito's authority to direct the employees without consulting with Nicolette.

Once Economy Gas was purchased by Synergy, a wholly different system was in place. The new branch headed by Bumstead was given a new number, 4076. The testimony of all the credible witnesses shows that Bumstead ran the branch. Every morning, Bumstead met with the other employees and gave out the day's assignments. Bumstead decided which employee would service each customer, but he left it to the employees to decide in what order they would complete their tasks. Employees asked Bumstead for time off.[6] Billing of customers was handled by secretary Paulette Pennachio. At the beginning, Pennachio worked with the Parsippany billing office, but the intention was that eventually Pennachio would bill all customers of branch 4076 directly. According to Bumstead and DePolito, it took a while for the Synergy computer system to merge the paperwork of old branch 4075 into the paperwork of new branch 4076. Thus, for a few weeks after the purchase in late October, 1986, the Synergy computer continued to generate paper for DePolito and Collazo's timesheets and payroll separate from that of branch 4076. Further, billing for the approximately 23 customers DePolito had serviced was not immediately integrated into branch 407. Consequently, DePolito continued to do some paperwork for branch 4075 in the fall of 1986. But Bumstead and DePolito both testified that by January 1987, the Synergy computer system had absorbed old branch 4075 into new branch 4076 and DePolito no longer had any responsibility for payroll or billing.

[5] Tobin did not testify in this proceeding.

[6] DePolito asked Bumstead's permission to be absent on 19 January 1987. Collazo asked Bumstead for permission to take time off.

One employee was hired after the purchase of Economy Gas. Nicolette hired Robert Crissey in early November and informed Bumstead that he would be working in Cold Spring.

On the day that the purchase of Economy Gas became effective, Nicolette met in Cold Spring with Bumstead, DePolito, and the other employees. Nicolette informed them all that Bumstead would be branch manager and DePolito would be service manager. Respondent relies on this fact to support its claim that DePolito was a supervisor. However, Bumstead testified that Nicolette told him to run branch 4076 as though it were his business. Bumstead described his job as to "cover all bases on whatever had to be done and make sure the operation ran smoothly." Bumstead stated that DePolito's job was to take care of the service work and installations and "layout the whole direction for the rest of the crew." However, from Bumstead's own testimony it is clear that Bumstead and not DePolito gave the crew work assignments everyday. Further, Bumstead also testified that he himself checked installations performed by the employees and saw that the work was done properly. Because DePolito was the most experienced employee, Bumstead assigned Collazo and Crissey alternately to work with DePolito on assignments so that they would learn to do installations.

The issue to be decided is whether on 4 February 1987, when he was discharged by Respondent, DePolito was a supervisor. I find that he was not. I do not believe that DePolito had authority to hire and fire employees before November 1986; there is no evidence that he had any such authority after November 1986. Once Bumstead took over the Synergy operation in November 1986, Bumstead assumed all authority to assign work to employees, lay out the routes, assign crewmembers to work together, and to grant time off. In addition, Bumstead reviewed the work to see that it had been done properly. There is no evidence that DePolito had any authority to discipline employees or adjust their grievances. The conclusion is inescapable that DePolito was an employee within the meaning of the Act on the day he was discharged.

D. DePolito's Discharge

Nicolette made the decision to discharge DePolito; he testified that he arrived at this decision while speaking to DePolito in the Cold Spring office on 4 February 1987. Nicolette attributed his decision to DePolito's attitude. The General Counsel asserts that Nicolette based his decision on DePolito's union activities.

1. Union activity

DePolito and Collazo testified that they began discussing the benefits of bringing a union into the plant in December 1986. During the first week of January 1987, DePolito obtained authorization cards from Local 456. DePolito and Randy Collazo signed the cards in early January. The two men visited Glen Pennachio at home in January 1987 and obtained his signature.[7] Paulette Pennachio testified that she was home with her brother Glen when DePolito and Collazo came to the house and gave him a union authorization card.

2. Respondent's awareness of union activity

On Friday, 30 January 1987, Glen Pennachio was in the office with Bumstead and Nicolette. Pennachio received his paycheck and when he saw that it did not contain the raise he expected, he got upset. According to Bumstead, Pennachio went "off the wall" and quit his job. The next day, Pennachio called Bumstead to apologize for his behavior; he also told Bumstead that DePolito had come to his house with union authorization cards. Pennachio told Bumstead that he had signed the card and then had second thoughts about it. Pennachio explained to Bumstead that he had quit the job "because he didn't want to be any part of [the Union]."[8] On Monday, 2 February, Glen Pennachio came to the plant saying that he would work his 2 weeks' notice. When Bumstead expressed surprise, Pennachio quit again. Sometime after this, Bumstead gave Pennachio his job back and got him the disputed raise.[9]

On 23 January 1987, John Russell, Synergy's vice president of operations, told Nicolette that he had heard a rumor that DePolito was organizing a union in Cold Spring and asked him to check it.[10] Nicolette testified that he did nothing about following Russell's instructions until 30 January when he spoke to DePolito in the parking lot of a diner in Cold Spring. Nicolette acknowledged that he called Bumstead on 26 January at 3 p. m. to ask him about "general attitudes and Frank [DePolito] and what was transpiring up there," but he claimed that despite Russell's questions 3 days before, he did not ask Bumstead about the union rumors.

According to Collazo, after the men had signed the cards in January, Collazo was in the office with DePo-

[7] Glen Pennachio did not testify in this proceeding.

[8] Paulette Pennachio also testified that her brother quit because he did not get the raise and too many people were bothering him about the Union.

[9] Pennachio apparently had a volatile temper. He had quit once before, on 7 January 1987, in an upset over a truck that malfunctioned. After he was out for 2 days, Bumstead let him come back to work. Paulette Pennachio, sister of Glen Pennachio, testified that he got upset and "loud" with Bumstead when the trucks broke down. Pennachio has a tendency to lose his temper and use profanity on such occasions; other employees heard Glen Pennachio use profanity to Bumstead.

[10] Russell obtained information about the rumor from Fleet Director Joe Gerard, whose son was a salesman in Cold Spring in late 1986.

lito, Bumstead, and Glen Pennachio. DePolito said he had told Bumstead about the Union and Bumstead shook his head saying. "I wish you hadn't said that." I credit this testimony, which is supported by DePolito's testimony.

Sometime in January 1987, according to DePolito, he and Bumstead were in the office together after business hours. DePolito told Bumstead the men needed a union. Bumstead replied that the men should wait until the end of the month because he did not want anything to interfere with his first quarterly payment from Synergy, which was due soon. Bumstead denied that this conversation took place; instead, he testified that he had a contract with Synergy and that union organizing could not affect his payments. However, after relying heavily on the contract of sale, Respondent did not introduce it into evidence and thus there is no proof that Synergy was obligated to make quarterly payments no matter what happened to the business. Moreover, there is no evidence that Synergy was obligated to continue Bumstead as branch manager. I credit DePolito's version of this conversation.

According to Collazo and DePolito on 21 or 22 January 1987, Crissey told DePolito that Nicolette wanted to see him. Collazo and DePolito were already in their cars. DePolito went in to the office and Collazo stayed in his car. In 5 minutes, Nicolette and DePolito came out and got into the front seat of DePolito's car. Collazo followed in his own car and they drove to the Countryside Terrace, a local restaurant. On the way, DePolito told Nicolette that the branch was not being run properly but Nicolette said they would have to put up with Bumstead for 2 more years.[11] In the restaurant parking lot, Collazo parked on the passenger side of DePolito's car, near Nicolette. After a minute, Nicolette rolled down the window and asked Collazo what his "problem" was. Collazo told Nicolette that the plant was badly run. Then Nicolette asked "what's with this Union bull shit?" DePolito and Collazo said they did not know what Nicolette was talking about. Nicolette replied that he heard DePolito and Collazo were trying to start a union. Nicolette said he heard from Bumstead that Collazo and DePolito went to Pennachio's house to obtain a signature on a card. Then Nicolette said he wanted to talk to DePolito alone and Collazo drove away. According to DePolito, after Collazo left, Nicolette said that the union talk was already in Farmingdale and he could not cover it up. Some further discussion about the branch ensued.

Nicolette claims that this conversation took place on 30 January.[12] In his version, when he went to the diner parking lot with Collazo and DePolito, the three men discussed medical insurance, wages, and friction among the employees in the shop. Then, according to Nicolette, he sent Collazo away and asked DePolito about the Union. DePolito denied that he had been talking union. Nicolette testified that one cause of friction in the Cold Spring branch concerned accusations that employees were not documenting the time spent or the materials used on a job. He instructed DePolito to adhere to paperwork rules that would be instituted.[13] Nicolette testified that he told DePolito he was a member of management and could not engage in union activity.

After this conversation, Nicolette testified, he saw Bumstead again and told him about the union rumor and DePolito's denial. Nicolette also urged Bumstead to see that the paperwork was done correctly. On cross-examination, Nicolette changed his testimony to say that he did not ask Bumstead about the union rumors until after he fired DePolito. At that time, he and Bumstead discussed Glen Pennachio's involvement with the Union. Based on Nicolette's shifting testimony and on Collazo's and DePolito's credited testimony, I find that on 30 January 1987 Nicolette asked Bumstead about the Union and that the two discussed Glen Pennachio.

I find that the conversation in the diner parking lot took place on 30 January rather than earlier as contended by DePolito and Collazo. I credit DePolito's and Collazo's version of the conversation. Thus, I find that by asking the two employees about "the union bull shit" and telling them that he knew they had solicited a card from Glen Pennachio, Nicolette conveyed to the employees that he disapproved of the union activities about which he was seeking information. Respondent thus coercively interrogated its employees in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176 (1984).

3. Events leading to DePolito's discharge

Nicolette testified that DePolito had some problem being reimbursed for his business telephone calls on behalf of Synergy; on Christmas Eve 1986, Nicolette and DePolito worked on recalculating the figures so the bill could be resubmitted for payment. Although Nicolette did not testify on direct examination about any warning he had ever given DePolito, on cross-examination, Nicolette recalled that on Christmas Eve he warned DePolito to "knock it off" about his "attitude towards the company . . . towards Wayne." DePolito denies this. I do not credit Nicolette and I find that this purported warning was an afterthought in Nicolette's testimony.

On 3 February 1987, a dispute erupted between DePolito and Bumstead concerning the hose winder mechanism of a tank truck. At 4:30 p.m. Bumstead was in the yard at the rear of the truck when DePolito walked by. DePolito and Collazo claim that DePolito told Bumstead he would see electrical wires arcing and that Bumstead threw down his tools and walked away. When DePolito said, "I guess we won't see the wires." Bumstead replied, "I don't need any of your wise bullshit." Bumstead then called DePolito a "guinea bastard" and DePolito called Bumstead "an asshole." Bumstead ordered DePolito to put his keys on the desk and get off the property. Bumstead claims that the argument started when DePolito told him he "was an asshole for working on the trucks" because he was not a mechanic. Both men agree that [11] Nicolette had told DePolito that Synergy was only using Bumstead to gain a storage facility and that Bumstead would be discharged soon after the purchase of Economy Gas.

[12] Bumstead's testimony supports the 30 January date.

[13] On the next workday, Bumstead distributed blank forms to be used to record time and materials used on each job.

Bumstead ordered DePolito to go home. I credit DePolito's and Collazo's version of the events.

Soon after this exchange Bumstead called Nicolette, who was in Vermont. He told Nicolette, "I've had it. I don't need the nonsense." Bumstead did not ask Nicolette to discharge DePolito, he just wanted Nicolette to talk to DePolito. Bumstead testified that he did not know Nicolette was going to fire DePolito. DePolito also called Nicolette after he got home and told the latter about the incident. Nicolette said he would be in Cold Spring in a couple of days.

Nicolette testified that Bumstead called to say that DePolito was cursing and that he "refused . . . to do any jobs" and did not turn in his paperwork. I do not credit this testimony; Bumstead did not testify that he mentioned paperwork or the failure to do any jobs when he called Nicolette on 3 February.

According to Collazo and DePolito, on 4 February, the day of DePolito's termination, DePolito came to work and all went normally.

In the late afternoon, Collazo and DePolito returned from their work and Nicolette was in the office. Nicolette told DePolito "aparently what we talked about before didn't sink in." Nicolette said DePolito and Bumstead told different stories and he began reviewing DePolito's shortcomings with him. Nicolette took out his notebook and told DePolito that he had failed to pick up a truck once in November and that there was too much mileage on the truck. Then Nicolette told DePolito he was terminated. DePolito asked why he was being discharged. He told Nicolette to look at his worksheets to see how much work he did. Nicolette replied that they were lost. At some point in this conversation, Collazo said Bumstead was using the pickup truck after hours for personal use and that that accounted for the excessive mileage.

According to Nicolette, he was in the Cold Spring office on 4 February when DePolito came in after work that day.[14] Nicolette testified that he said to DePolito, "what's all the yelling and screaming going on again. I thought we talked this Friday." DePolito replied, "So?" Nicolette asked if DePolito had been turning in his paperwork. DePolito indicated that he had but that maybe Bumstead threw it away. Nicolette stated that he then fired DePolito because the latter was "very short, copping attitudes with me." DePolito's attitude was "negative." Nicolette stated that he had gone to Cold Spring with the purpose of getting DePolito and Bumstead together and ironing out their difficulties, not with the intent of firing DePolito. Nicolette testified that before he spoke to DePolito on 4 February, he had not planned to discharge him but only to admonish him to get along better with Bumstead. Nicolette testified that his decision to discharge DePolito came about because DePolito shrugged his shoulders and seemed unconcerned. DePolito's termination report was prepared by Nicolette. It states that DePolito was terminated for "Attitude and Actions Nonbecoming a Manager." The termination date shown is "2/4/87" and it bears Nicolette's signature date "2/2/87." Nicolette testified that he signed the document on 4 February; he could not explain why it was dated 2 February. The document thus suggests that Nicolette decided to discharge DePolito before 4 February 1987.

Even though Nicolette's initial testimony was that he fired DePolito for his "Attitude" and even though the official termination report supports this reason, Nicolette then added to his testimony and seemed to say DePolito was fired for a long list of shortcomings. Respondent introduced testimony purporting to show that DePolito was an unsatisfactory employee during 1986. Nicolette testified about a number of incidents involving alleged failings by DePolito. Some of these instances involve problems which Bumstead; the immediate supervisor, attributed to other employees: This included the Brewster North delivery missed by Collazo and the use of too much copper tubing by Crissey and Collazo. Other instances were satisfactorily explained by DePolito in unrebutted testimony: Bumstead complained that DePolito failed to make a delivery to a customer named Elton. The testimony shows that DePolito could not get up the Elton driveway in the Synergy pickup truck due to snow; however, when DePolito offered to try again, Bumstead's wife informed him that Bumstead had made the call already in a four-wheel-drive vehicle. Bumstead testified that a customer named Ritell complained that he ran out of gas because DePolito was not making automatic deliveries to him. However, Bumstead could not testify that Ritell had indeed requested automatic service, Nicolette testified in such a way as to imply that Bumstead had complained that DePolito stole some company property from a truck. However, Bumstead's version of the event was different; Bumstead saw DePolito remove something from the truck, but he did not check to see if company property was missing. DePolito credibly testified that he had removed his own tools from the truck. The only serious example of failure by DePolito to be cited by Bumstead and Nicolette involved the Lake View cottages job. This work called for numerous individual tank installations on a property in the process of being developed. Some of the housing units were near soggy ground. Instead of placing the tanks at the usual distance from the dwellings, which would have entailed the danger of tanks toppling over due to the unsteady ground, DePolito and the other employees placed the tanks close to the housing units. Bumstead considered this a code violation and informed DePolito of this fact in Nicolette's presence. He said the tanks would have to be moved. Whether DePolito had indeed permitted an unsafe installation to be carried out is immaterial. On various days, including the last day of the trial, many months after the alleged improper installation, witnesses testified that the tanks were still in the same position. I find that if the problem was as serious as is contended by Respondent, the tanks would long since have been moved. Thus, I find that Respondent did not take the problem seriously enough to correct the situation during the months after it first occurred and that it was not a major failing by DePolito. I find that the long list of shortcomings was an afterthought. Nicolette's testimony about the alleged failings of DePolito is not reliable and is not supported by Bumstead's testimony.

[14] Nicolette had discussed the argument of the day before with Paulette Pennachio before DePolito entered the office.

4. Discussion and conclusions

I find that the motivating factor in the discharge of DePolito was that he was organizing the Union at the Cold Spring branch.

Nicolette admittedly learned of the union organizing by DePolito on 23 January 1987, less than 2 weeks before he fired DePolito. On 30 January, he coercively interrogated DePolito and Collazo about their union activities and told DePolito that headquarters knew of the organizing efforts. Nicolette and Bumstead discussed the Union before Nicolette discharge DePolito. Bumstead knew that DePolito had approached Glen Pennachio about the Union and Nicolette mentioned this fact to DePolito on 30 January. That Nicolette had antiunion animus is made clear by his use of the term "the union bull shit."

I find that the exchange of words between DePolito and Bumstead on 3 February was used as a convenient excuse to discharge DePolito. Both General Counsel's and Respondent's witnesses testified that Glen Pennachio cursed and yelled on various occasions when things did not go his way, yet Pennachio was not fired, Pennachio was allowed to come back after he quit in a huff and Pennachio was given a raise. Thus, I find that DePolito would not have been discharged for the brief episode on 3 February had he not also been engaged in an effort to bring in the Union. See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1089 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982); NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983).

Bumstead, the immediate supervisor, did not ask Nicolette to discharge DePolito. Indeed, Nicolette said he had no intention of discharging DePolito until he saw that the latter had an "attitude." Yet Nicolette did not explain in any detail what the attitude consisted of and why it justified the termination. Nicolette did not explain why DePolito's "attitude" was worse than Glen Pennachio's. Respondent's official termination report mentions "attitudes and action," but it makes no reference to the long list of purported job-related inadequacies Nicolette described at the hearing. As shown above, these inadequacies were a sham. Thus, I find that the so-called attitude and failings cited to support the discharge were a pretext. See Wright Line, supra.

In conclusion, I find that Respondent discharged DePolito because he was organizing the Union at the Cold Spring plant. Respondent thus violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. By coercively interrogating its employees concerning their union activities, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

2. By discharging Frank DePolito because he supported the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order it to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.[15]

The Respondent having discriminatorily discharged Frank DePolito, it must offer him reinstatement and make him whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits, computed on a quarterly basis from date of discharge to date of proper offer of reinstatement, less any net interim earnings, as prescribed in F. W Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest as computed in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).[16]

Respondent must remove from its records any mention of DePolito's discharge on 4 February 1987.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[17]

ORDER

The Respondent, Synergy Gas Corp., Cold Spring, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Interrogating its employees concerning their union activities.

(b) Discharging its employees because they engage in concerted activities.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Frank DePolito immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make him whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against him in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the discharge of 4 February 1987 and notify Frank DePolito in writing that this has been done and that evidence of the unlawful discharge will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against him.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

[15] The General Counsel's request for a visitatorial Order is denied.

[16] Under New Horizons, interest is computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. 6621. Interest accrued before 1 January 1987 (the effective date of the amendment) shall be computed as in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[17] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(d) Post at its Cold Spring, New York facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[18] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 2, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[18] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT discharge our employees for engaging in union activities.

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees about their union activities.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Frank DePolito immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent positon, without prejucice to his seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make him whole for any loss of earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our records any mention of the unlawful discharge of Frank DePolito.

SYNERGY GAS CORP.

Security Search and Abstract Company of Philadelphia, Inc. and Teamsters Union Local No. 115, a/w International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO.[1] Case 4–CA–16421

August 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On May 2, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Nancy M. Sherman issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed a brief in response.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions [3] and to adopt the recommended Order.[4]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Security Search and Abstract Company of Philadelphia, Inc., Philadelphia and Norristown, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the administrative law judge.

[1] On November 1, 1987, the Teamsters International Union was readmitted to the AFL–CIO. Accordingly, the caption has been amended to reflect that change.

[2] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[3] The Respondent did not except to the judge's conclusions that it violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act in several respects, including threatening and interrogating its employees in connection with the Union, and that it violated Sec. 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by transferring discriminatee Peggy West because of her union activities. The General Counsel did not except to the judge's dismissal of the complaint allegation that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act when Supervisor Patterson questioned employee Snodgrass about the Union.

Because we find that the Respondent unlawfully discharged West after it unlawfully transferred her, we find it unnecessary to pass on the judge's discussion regarding what would be the appropriate remedy should only the transfer have been found unlawful.

[4] The attached notice is substituted for that of the judge in order to correct an inadvertent error.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT threaten, because of your union activities, to dock your wages if you are late, to transfer you because of your union activities, to discharge you if you continue your union activities, or to reduce your wages if a union comes in.

WE WILL NOT tell you that you cannot use company telephones because of your union activities.

WE WILL NOT coercively question you about your union support or activities.

WE WILL NOT discourage membership in Teamsters Union Local No. 115, a/w International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO, or any other union, by transferring you, changing your terms and conditions of employment, discharging you, or otherwise discriminating against you in regard to your hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Peggy West immediate and full reinstatement to her former job in our Philadelphia office from which she was unlawfully transferred or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make her whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from her discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to the unlawful transfer and discharge of Peggy West, and notify her that this has been done and that the transfer and discharge will not be used against her in any way.

SECURITY SEARCH AND ABSTRACT COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, INC.

Margarita Navarro-Rivera, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Steven R. Williams, Esq., of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for the Respondent.
Norton H. Brainard III, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for the Union.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

NANCY M. SHERMAN, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard before me in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on 20–23 July 1987, pursuant to a charge filed on 24 February, and amended on 27 February 1987, by Teamsters Union Local No. 115, a/w International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO (the Union) and a complaint issued on 28 April and amended on 20 and 21 July 1987. The complaint in its final form alleges that Security Search and Abstract Company of Philadelphia, Inc. (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by threatening and interrogating employees in connection with the Union; and violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by changing Peggy West's conditions of employment, and by transferring and then discharging her, because of her union activity.

On the basis of the entire record, including the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by counsel for the General Counsel (the General Counsel) and Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Pennsylvania corporation that researches real estate titles at its facilities in Philadelphia and Norristown, Pennsylvania. During the year preceding the issuance of the complaint, Respondent's gross revenues exceeded $500,000 and Respondent provided services valued in excess of $50,000 to several banking firms in Pennsylvania, each of which is engaged in interstate banking under the Federal Reserve System. I find that Respondent is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act, and that assertion of jurisdiction over Respondent's operations will effectuate the policies of the Act. Siemons Mailing Service, 122 NLRB 81, 85–86 (1958); Amalgamated Bank of New York, 92 NLRB 545 (1950); Carolina Supplies & Cement Co., 122 NLRB 88 (1958).

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of the Act. See Teamsters Local 115 (Gross Metal), 275 NLRB 1547, 1549 (1985), enfd. mem. 800 F.2d 1136 (3d Cir. 1986), of which I take judicial notice.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Peggy West's Employment History

About August 1976, George Billings, who at that time was running what was then Respondent's largest customer (Provident Consumer Discount Company), asked Jack Hornstein, Respondent's president, to hire as a clerical employee a friend of Billings, Peggy West, who was then working as a waitress and had no clerical experience. Hornstein replied that he could not afford to hire any more employees. Billings told Hornstein to give her $100 a week and build it into Provident's bill. Hornstein did hire West in August 1976. Her wages were paid in the manner proposed by Billings until about early 1978, when Respondent began to pay her from the same source of funds that it used to pay the other employees. At the time West began to work for Respondent, she suffered from a hearing impairment that made it impossible for her to use the telephone without special equipment for which Respondent was reluctant and, perhaps, could not afford to pay. Her initial duties consisted of filing and of "making deliveries" to customers, a function discussed below. In 1978, she underwent ear operations, which enabled her to answer telephones. About 1981, she began to "make deliveries" to city hall, a function discussed below. By 1986, her last full year of employment with Respondent, her principal responsibility was handling the mail in the Philadelphia office, a function discussed infra part II,F,1,a. Between 1976 and her February 1987 discharge, Respondent's personnel complement increased tenfold, from 8 to 80.

At all material times, the functions performed by Respondent's Philadelphia office have included "making deliveries" on foot. At all times since West's hire in 1976, "making deliveries" in the Philadelphia office has included transporting documents between that office and the offices of Respondent's customers on a daily basis. Making a "full delivery route" to customers calls for "deliveries" to 30 to 50 different customers in the downtown Philadelphia area, and consumes 2 to 5 hours. West stopped "making deliveries" to customers in 1982 after she underwent a leg operation necessitated by phlebitis.[1] Since about 1981, "making deliveries" in the Philadelphia office has also included taking deeds, mortgages, and prothonotary filings, on a daily basis, to the recorder of deeds at city hall, obtaining receipts therefore, and picking up documents after they have been recorded. Except for a recuperation period after her 1982 phlebitis operation, West consumed about 2 hours every day making deliveries to the recorder of deeds, about 4 blocks from Respondent's Sansom Street office, between about 1981 and about March 1986, a month or so before Respondent's Philadelphia office moved from Sansom Street to Pine Street.[2] Toward the end of this period, "making deliveries" at city hall required her to make occasional hunts for documents there as well as carrying documents. Hornstein also described as "making deliveries" in the Philadelphia office the occasional task of taking the stamp machine to the post office for filling, and taking documents to Respondent's attorney. The record fails to show how often these errands had to be performed. Hornstein credibly testified that West took the stamp machine to the post office on one occasion after the move to Pine Street.[3] With these exceptions, West made no "deliveries" of any kind after the move to Pine Street.[4]

[1] This finding is based on credible parts of West's testimony. Hornstein testified that she continued to "make deliveries" to customers "till about '84, '85."

[2] This finding is based on credible parts of the testimony of Hornstein, employee Judith Werner, and Office Manager Denise Patterson. For demeanor reasons, I do not accept West's testimony that she made only one such delivery after her phlebitis operation.

Since about 1982, Respondent has had a practice of giving to each employee a wage review that, ordinarily, takes place a year after the employee's most recent wage review. Hornstein testified that in determining whether an employee should receive a raise in consequence of the review, he gives weight to absences, and latenesses, without good excuse; but gives little or no weight to absences and latenesses for legitimate reasons. He further testified that he could not recall any wage reviews of West that failed to result in a wage increase. Her last wage review, in February or March 1986, was at her request held several months before her anniversary date, and led to an increase that exceeded 10 percent and raised her weekly wages to $275.

About 1982, West missed an undisclosed amount of time because of her phlebitis operation. On an undisclosed date, perhaps in 1984, she missed an undisclosed amount of time because of major abdominal surgery.

In 1977, West (who as of August 1986 was a single parent) advised Respondent that her daughter, Kelly, was afflicted with cystic fibrosis. For the next 7 or 8 years thereafter, West was 10 or 15 minutes late two or three times a week, because she had to administer therapy to her daughter and sometimes this took longer than at other times. Respondent does not require employees to sign or clock in or out, and does not have a practice of docking employees in the Philadelphia office when they are less than a half hour late. West was never docked for being late. She made up at least some of this missed time by taking shorter lunch periods.

Until 1987, Respondent permitted employees who (like West) had more than 3 years' service to take an annual paid vacation of 2 nonconsecutive weeks.[5] Also, at all relevant times, Respondent has permitted employees who (like West) have more than 1 year's service to take 5 days' annual paid sick or personal leave, which the employee is free to take for any reason he chooses.[6] About 25 June 1986, Kelly became critically ill. When the hospital called West at the office to tell her that Kelly was not expected to live, West broke down in tears. Hornstein took her into the conference room to calm her down, and told her "just leave right away." On the following day, West advised Hornstein that Kelly's condition was very bad, that she needed an operation, and that West would be coming in a few hours late because she wanted to see her daughter in the hospital in the morning. West told Hornstein to deduct from her pay any lost time she could not make up at lunch. He told her that she had been there 10 years, she had been a good employee, and not to worry about anything. Kelly had to undergo surgery, and spent a month or 6 weeks in the hospital. While she was in the hospital, West regularly came in several hours late; on some days, spent only an hour or two at the office; and on at least 1 day, when Kelly was undergoing surgery, did not come in at all. On a couple of occasions during this period, West asked Hornstein to deduct from her pay the lost time she did not make up by working late or during her lunch period. She did thereby make up some of this missed time. Respondent never did dock her pay for the time she lost while Kelly was in the hospital. Moreover, Respondent paid West for a day's vacation, which she took on 28 November 1986, the day after Thanksgiving and several months after Kelly's release from the hospital.[7]

Before Kelly's hospitalization, West had taken 1 week's paid vacation the week of 4 February 1986. As previously noted, after Kelly's discharge from the hospital, West took a day's paid vacation on 28 November 1986. Thereafter, West took a second week of vacation (approved by Hornstein before Kelly's hospitalization) the week between 29 December 1986 and 3 January 1987 inclusive.[8] The rather casually kept attendance record on West's personnel folder states that between the beginning of 1986 and Kelly's hospitalization about 25 June 1986, West was absent about 6 days. This record further states that West was absent on 6 August 1986 (which may or may not have been while Kelly was still in the hospital) and was absent on a Friday (10 October 1986), which preceded a Monday holiday for which, in consequence, she did not get paid. Also, these records state that between 14 August and 26 December 1986, she was 4-1/2 hours late on 14 August, left at 1 p.m. on 28 August, and left at 2 p.m. on 26 November and 26 December, in both cases to catch a plane. Also, during a period when Hornstein, contrary to his usual custom, kept records of West's tardinesses shorter than a half hour, she was 7 to 10 minutes late on 4 days between 15 August and 25 September 1986 inclusive. With the exception described supra at footnote 8, she was not docked for any of these absences or tardinesses. These records further state that

[3] Before the move to Pine Street, the post office and the attorney's office were about 4 blocks and 2 blocks, respectively, from Respondent's office. After the move, the distances were about 7 and 12 blocks, respectively.

[4] This finding is based on credible parts of the testimony of Werner, Hornstein, and West. For demeanor reasons, I do not credit the contrary testimony of employee Mark Russo.

[5] On an undisclosed date between 13 February and 22 July 1987, Respondent began to give 3 weeks' paid vacation to employees who (like West) had more than 10 years' service.

[6] Payment for a particular year's unused personal leave is added to the employee's Christmas bonus.

[7] In view of West's November 1986 receipt of another day of paid vacation and Respondent's failure to dock her for her lost time in the summer of 1986, I credit her denial that Hornstein told her that deductions from her vacation would be made for the time she lost that summer because of Kelly's illness. For similar and demeanor reasons, I accept her testimony (set forth in the text) about her conversations with Hornstein regarding Kelly's illness and West's pay, and reject his testimony that when she told him about Kelly's illness, he told her that Respondent would "collect the time at the end . . . we'll work it out at a future date."

[8] Initially, Respondent refused to pay her for this second week of vacation. See infra, parts II,A and C.

between 5 January and 9 February 1987, she was out sick for 7 days (6 of which she was paid for and was absent for 1 day for which she was not paid) because of a snowstorm. Also, she was a half-hour late on 1 day; and was an hour late on another day. She was not docked for these two tardinesses.

As previously noted, before 29 December 1986 West had taken as formal paid vacation days only 6 of the 10 days she was entitled to. Before her daughter's illness, West had received approval from Hornstein for 3 more days of paid vacation in 1986 (that is, 29, 30, and 31 December) plus 2 days in 1987 (2 and 3 January). About early December 1986, she drew Hornstein's attention to this forthcoming vacation. He told her that she really did not have the time coming. She said that he did not have to pay her. He said that business was really slow at Christmastime and she was welcome to take her vacation, but he could not pay her for it. She said "fine."

On West's return from her December-January vacation, she asked Hornstein for her vacation pay. He said that she had agreed to not being paid for it. She said that she wanted to take the first week of her vacation for 1987. He said that under Respondent's rules, she could not cash in a future vacation; that without special permission, vacations had to be taken after 1 June; and that he was "not moving up a vacation week; you have been out plenty." She said that she was going to the "unemployment board" about the matter. He told her to go ahead and do so. She asked why she had not been paid for her vacation. Hornstein angrily referred her to Company Vice President Marc Lovenworth, who told her that she had not been paid because she had taken a lot of paid time off when her daughter was in the hospital. Inferentially a few days later, while West and other employees were eating lunch in the lunchroom, she saw Hornstein walking by. She stopped him and screamed that her failure to receive vacation pay was unfair, she thought she should be paid "regardless," and her friend George Billings had given and was giving Respondent a lot of business.

B. West's Union Activity; Alleged Interference, Restraint, and Coercion

On 4 February 1987,[9] West telephoned Union Representative Bob Henninger and asked about undertaking a union organizing campaign at Respondent's establishment. The two of them arranged for a meeting at the union hall between Henninger and Respondent's employees on 9 February. Because of a snowstorm that day, West telephoned Henninger again and rescheduled the meeting to 10 February, when it was in fact held. This meeting was attended by West and employees Judith Werner and Roberta Snodgrass. Henninger told them about the Union and union elections, had them sign authorization cards, and gave them authorization cards to distribute to Respondent's work force.

Between 8 and 8:30 a.m. on 11 February, just before Respondent's office opened for business, West and Werner stood at a point on the sidewalk four or five doors away from Respondent's establishment. As Respondent's employees approached the office, West and Werner called them over, stated that West and Werner were trying to get a set policy in the office on vacation and sick days and raises, and asked them to sign union cards. Ten or 15 employees accepted cards and at least 1 employee signed a card on the spot. At one point, West and Werner were approached by Irene Leclair, who worked in Respondent's title department. Leclair asked whether this was a union meeting. Werner said that she and West were trying to form a union, and asked Leclair whether she would like to have a card. Leclair said no, that she was management.[10]

Just before the start of the workday, West entered Respondent's establishment. As she approached her desk, a title department employee identified in the record as "Theresa" asked West, "What is this all about the Union?" West said that she could not talk to her about it now because "we were told not to talk about it on office time." Theresa returned to her desk and telephoned West, who said that she would give Theresa a card, and talk to her about the Union at lunchtime. Later that morning, West had a similar conversation with bookkeeping department employee Diane Clemens.

At an undisclosed hour on the morning of 11 February, an employee identified in the record as "JoAnn" approached Office Manager Patterson, admittedly a supervisor in Respondent's Philadelphia office, and told her that there was union activity, that West and Werner were trying to sign up people to join a union, and that JoAnn did not want to join. Thereafter, Patterson went to "plant" Manager Carmen Viola, also admittedly a supervisor in Respondent's Philadelphia office. Patterson told him that "one of the girls had approached me that had been approached about joining the Union." The two supervisors discussed whether to tell Hornstein or Lovenworth. Patterson testified that "We both decided not to because there wasn't enough participation, we didn't think, from talks with fellow employees that there was going to be any union or enough people to join." Viola did not testify, nor was his absence explained.

About 10 a.m. on 11 February, West entered Viola's office and told him that she and other women were trying to organize a union. She asked him whether he would mind if she talked to the title searchers, who were all male and were supervised by Viola, on lunchtime or after work. He said that he did not object. He further said that he could understand the "girls'" situation, because they were not well paid; but that if the "fellows" asked him about a union, he would advise them against it, because the "fellow searchers" were very well paid, Hornstein did not bother them, and if a union came in, their wages would be lowered "right away" to some sort of uniform scale that would be lower than what they were making now. West said that this was not true, that they would not get lower wages.

[9] All dates hereafter are 1987 unless otherwise indicated.

[10] West testified that Leclair was the supervisor of the title department. Hornstein testified that she was "just a clerk, an assistant to" the head of that department. As the General Counsel does not claim that Respondent acquired knowledge of the union movement through Leclair or that she engaged in any unlawful conduct attributable to Respondent, determination of her status is unnecessary.

That same day, during a work-related telephone conversation, West was asked about the Union by Robin Davis, who was the office manager of the Company's Bucks County office and was admittedly a supervisor. West asked if she was interested in the Union. Davis said that she was not, but asked whether West wanted her to call the office managers in the other counties (who were also supervisors; see infra, part II,F,1) to see if they were interested. West said that Davis could do this if she wanted to, and asked whether West could send union cards out there to the employees. Davis did not object.

At lunch that day, West and Werner and/or Snodgrass received signed authorization cards from Theresa and Clemens. Another Philadelphia employee, and an employee in the Montgomery County office in Norristown, Pennsylvania, also gave signed cards to West and Werner and/or Snodgrass.

On 12 or 13 February, during a conversation on the street with employee Snodgrass, Supervisor Patterson asked her what she thought of the Union and whether she wanted to join a union. The record fails to show Snodgrass' reply, if any.

C. West's Allegedly Unlawful Transfer

About late January 1987, West told Company Vice President Lovenworth that she had received a trip to Florida as a Valentine's Day gift, and asked whether she could take 2 vacation days. He said yes.[11] She was in Florida between 12 February (a Thursday) and Monday, 16 February (a holiday), inclusive. On the evening of 12 February, she telephoned Werner and Snodgrass at home to ask them "how the cards were going" and encouraged them to continue their organizing activity.

During the week beginning Sunday, 8 February, Company President Hornstein was in Florida on vacation. While taking out-of-town vacation trips, Hornstein had a practice of making frequent collect telephone calls to at least Respondent's Philadelphia office, in order to find out how the business was getting along.[12] He flew back to Philadelphia on Friday, 13 February, and was driven by his wife directly from the airport (where her car was parked) to the office (where his own car was parked). Immediately on entering the building, about 1:30 p.m., he encountered Supervisor Viola. After a conversation with Viola where (Hornstein credibly testified) West was discussed, Hornstein had within earshot of Patterson a conversation with Lovenworth where (Hornstein credibly testified) West was again discussed.[13] A few minutes later, Hornstein drafted, arranged for the typing of, and signed the following letter, which he arranged to have sent to West by registered or certified mail:

> Due to the increase in work load in our Norristown office and the decrease of our work load in our Philadelphia office, you will be transferred immediately to our Norristown office located at 18 W. Airy Street, Suite 403, Norristown, PA 19401
>
> You will report to Andrea Barone as Supervisor. There will be no change in wages because responsibilities will be [similar]. Good luck in your new assignment.

Hornstein laid a copy of this letter on Lovenworth's desk.

Before leaving the office on 13 February, Hornstein telephoned Andrea Barone, the office manager of Respondent's Norristown office and admittedly a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. Hornstein's initial testimony about this conversation implies that he telephoned Barone before drafting the letter transferring West to Norristown, but he later testified that he telephoned Barone after the letter had been typed and while employee Werner was arranging for it to be sent by certified mail. Without stating what West's duties would be, he told Barone that West would start work in Norristown on the next working day—Tuesday, 17 February.[14] Hornstein admittedly knew that West lived in New Jersey and had been commuting to Respondent's office in downtown Philadelphia by driving her car to and then riding public transportation, which consisted of the "high-speed line," admittedly anticipated that her transfer to Norristown (about 20 miles from Philadelphia) would require her to take a train or bus from Philadelphia, and admittedly anticipated that her transfer would probably extend her commuting time. Barone, who had known West for 9 years, testified that because of the distance between Norristown, Pennsylvania, and West's residence in Lindenwold, New Jersey, Barone had not [11] My finding as to the date of this conversation is based on West's testimony that it occurred on a Wednesday or Thursday about a week before her departure for Florida on 11 or 12 February (a Wednesday and Thursday, respectively) and on Hornstein's testimony that Lovenworth was in Florida during the entire week of 2–6 February. Her testimony that Lovenworth gave her prior permission to take these 2 days off is undisputed. He did not testify, nor was his absence explained. Hornstein testified that on 13 February, Lovenworth told him that Lovenworth and West had discussed her vacation before her departure. Hornstein further testified to a similar report from Supervisor Patterson on an undisclosed date.

[12] This finding is based on West's testimony. In view of the probabilities of the case, and for demeanor reasons, I do not credit Hornstein's denial that he followed this practice, or his denial that he telephoned the Philadelphia office during his Florida vacation. See NLRB v. Walton Mfg. Co., 369 U.S. 404, 408 (1962). Respondent failed to produce either its telephone bill for this period, or Hornstein's hotel bill, which would have shown whether any long-distance calls had been made from the phone in his hotel room.

[13] Hornstein's detailed version of these two conversations is discussed infra, part II,F,2. Viola and Lovenworth did not testify, nor was their absence explained. Supervisor Patterson was not asked about this conversation when Respondent called her as a witness. On cross-examination by union counsel, Patterson testified that she had known before West's transfer the reason for the transfer, but could not remember the reason. Then, Patterson testified that she had heard from a "general conversation," which she "might have overheard," on a date which and between persons whose identity she could not remember and who may or may not have been supervisors, that the only reason for West's transfer was that the Norristown office "needed somebody." For demeanor reasons, I do not credit either her professions of forgetfulness, or her testimony regarding the content of this alleged possible conversation.

[14] These findings regarding what he said are based on the testimony of Barone, who testified for Respondent. In view of Hornstein's testimony that he transferred West partly because he was angry at her, because of his testimony at one point that he telephoned Barone after he signed the letter transferring West to Barone's Norristown office, because of the evidence (infra, part II,C) that the Norristown office did not then need any more employees, and for demeanor reasons, I do not credit his testimony that Barone said she needed help, he asked if she would take West, and Barone said that would be fine. See also infra, fn. 15.

thought that West would actually report to work in Norristown.[15]

The customers for whom Respondent performs property searches include First Jersey Financial Corporation, a company that finances mortgages and thereafter sells more of them. Before February 1987, First Jersey Financial had also used Tri-State Appraisal Service, a corporation whose stock is owned by Respondent's president and one of its principal owners (Hornstein) and by Respondent's vice president (Lovenworth), to perform appraisals.[16] About mid-February 1987, First Jersey Financial's president, Frank Pellegrini, engaged in a telephone conversation with Lovenworth about a property search to be performed by Respondent for First Jersey Financial. During this conversation, Lovenworth asked why the volume of appraisals had slowed down. Pellegrini said that his firm was selling a lot of first mortgages to Tri County Savings and Loan, and that Tri County Savings' president, George Billings, had said that First Jersey Financial could no longer use Tri-State Appraisal on transactions involving Tri County Savings because prospective buyers of mortgages that it was trying to sell had been advising Billings that Tri-State Appraisal's appraisals were not right, and Billings had had to buy a few deals back. As previously noted, Billings was the individual who had initially arranged for West's hire by Respondent; moreover, in July 1986, Billings had entertained West, Hornstein, and Hornstein's wife at Billings' house at the seashore and, in August 1986, West had given Billings' name to Respondent as the person to notify in case of an emergency. In response to Pellegrini's remarks, Lovenworth said that he had known that was coming. He went on to say that Respondent had transferred West to Norristown, she was disrupting the office in regards to forming a union.[17]

D. Alleged Further Interference, Restraint, and Coercion; the Alleged Unlawful Change in West's Working Conditions and Her Allegedly Unlawful Discharge

On Friday, 14 February, West made a telephone call from Florida to her daughter Kelly, who read to her over the telephone the letter transferring West to Norristown. The Norristown office, like the Philadelphia office, begins work at 8:30 a.m.[18] West reported to work in the Norristown office at that hour on the next working day (Tuesday, 17 February).[19] Barone's first remark was, "I do not believe you really came here." West asked whether Barone had not received a letter that West was coming. Barone said that she had received a telephone call, but had never expected West to come all this distance. Barone went on to say that she had no spot for West, but that Norristown employee Denise Dirkson had not yet arrived, and that West could sit at her desk until Dirkson came in. About 9 a.m., Barone telephoned Dirkson, who said that she was not going to come in any more. Then, Barone told West that Dirkson had quit, "and now we have a spot . . . for you."

That day, West helped the other Norristown personnel to arrange furniture and plants in the office, into which Respondent had just moved. In addition, she took one telephone call and ran off one piece of work. She volunteered to file a foot-high stack of papers waiting to be filed, but was told that this was someone else's job. She spent the rest of the workday reading a newspaper and a magazine. Another employee in the office also read a magazine during working hours.[20]

On the following morning, 18 February, West had not yet arrived when the office opened for business at 8:30 a.m. At 8:45 a.m., Barone telephoned Hornstein and asked whether West was coming in. He said that he did not know, and told Barone to have West call him when she came in. West, who had been delayed because her train had had a signal problem, came in at 9 a.m. Barone told her that Hornstein wanted her to call him right away. At 9:10, West called Hornstein. He said that she was 45 minutes late.[21] She said that she could not help being late, that she was late because her train had had a signal problem, and that she would compensate for her tardiness by shortening her lunchbreak, "we always did it that way in Philadelphia." He said, "We do not do it out there." She remarked, "Oh, you have a double standard now for each of the offices." She said that she would compensate for her tardiness by working late. He told her that she could not do that either because in Norristown only Barone and one of the searchers had keys to the office. Although Hornstein testified that this searcher regularly reported to work before 7 a.m., there is no evidence that Hornstein told her this or suggested that she could make up the lost time by coming in early. He said

[15] Such testimony by Barone is difficult to square with Hornstein's discredited testimony that she asked for additional help and said "fine" to his proposal of West.

[16] Respondent and Tri-State Appraisal are two of the three tenants in a building owned by a partnership consisting of Hornstein and Lovenworth.

[17] My findings as to the remarks by Lovenworth, Respondent's vice president, are based on Pellegrini's uncontradicted testimony. Respondent's posthearing brief errs in contending that such testimony of Pellegrini constituted hearsay, which was not legally probative of Respondent's motive for transferring West. United Beef Co., 277 NLRB 1014, 1022–1025 (1985).

[18] My findings concerning the Norristown office are based on West's testimony and on Hornstein's testimony on direct examination; see also infra, fn. 21.

[19] My finding that she reported to work at this hour is based on West's uncontradicted testimony. Because of such testimony, other reasons summarized infra, fn. 21, and demeanor considerations, I do not credit Hornstein's testimony (denied by West and uncorroborated by Barone) that Barone called him at 8:10 a.m. on 17 February to tell him that West was organizing a union, Barone put West on the telephone at West's request, and he told her not to engage in union activity during working hours because the Norristown office had a lot of work on hand. I note that West's first workday at Norristown did not begin until 20 minutes after this alleged conversation, virtually no work at Norristown was available for West on that day (see infra), and except for the testimony of Hornstein discussed in this footnote, the only evidence of any union activity by West in Norristown before this conversation took place is her testimony that one Norristown employee signed a union card on an undisclosed date.

[20] My findings in this paragraph are based on West's uncontradicted testimony. Cf. supra, fn. 19.

[21] My finding that he told her at 9:10 a.m. that she was 45 minutes late is based on Hornstein's direct testimony, a few minutes after he testified in terms that her Norristown workday began at 8:30 a.m. Accordingly, I do not accept his testimony on cross-examination that her Norristown workday began at 8 a.m. Norristown Office Manager Barone was called by Respondent as a witness, but was not asked about this matter.

that he was going to dock her pay. He went on to say that she was not allowed to use the phones and she was using them for union activities. She told him that she was not using the phones, and if she made any union calls, she made them on lunchtime, on phones outside the office. Hornstein said that he was going to transfer West to the other county offices.[22] She said that she would hand out cards there, too.[23] When West worked in the Philadelphia office, employees were permitted to make up latenesses by shortening their lunch period or working late. As of the July 1987 hearing, at least this former practice was still being followed in that office. In the absence of any testimony about the practice in the Norristown office, other than West's credited but uncorroborated testimony about what Hornstein told her during the foregoing conversation (see supra, fn. 23), I infer that the practice there was the same. The record directly shows that in the Philadelphia office, employees were permitted to make any number of personal calls on company phones, but were forbidden to use company phones for this purpose during the employees' worktime. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, and in view of Norristown Office Manager Barone's testimony that Hornstein did not during his call about West's transfer ask Barone to monitor West's use of the phones, I infer that the Norristown office had a similar practice. Hornstein testified that he made no entry in an employee's personnel folder when the employee was late because the trains were not running, and that attendance records of "county" personnel were made by him on their personnel folders on the basis of reports from the county office managers. In the absence of direct evidence otherwise, I infer that concerning tardiness, he followed the same practice with respect to all employees—Philadelphia or "county."

On Thursday, 19 February, West was absent from work because her daughter, Kelly, was sick. About 11 a.m. on 20 February, Hornstein telephoned the Norristown office. When West answered the telephone, he asked for Barone. West replied that Barone was over at the courthouse. Then, he asked to speak to a Norristown employee identified in the record as "Roxanne." West replied that Roxanne was not in the office that day. He asked West to have Barone call him immediately. West said that she would like her vacation pay. He asked, what vacation pay? She said, the $275. He said that he was not giving her the $275, that she had said she was going to sue him, and that she should go ahead and sue. She said that she and Billings were going to sue Hornstein, that it would cost him "a fortune," but that it would not cost her a penny because Billings had "friends in the Union." Hornstein said that if she did not stop all this union activity, he was going to fire her. She said that she and Billings were going to sue Hornstein on four counts: that she was going to get her vacation pay; that she was going to get fired and get her "unemployment"; that she was going to "get" Hornstein for blocking a union; and that if her daughter died, she and Billings were going to bring Hornstein in for obstructing West, by transferring her to the Norristown office, from giving Kelly therapy. West said that she was going to give Hornstein as much grief as she possibly could. He said that this was ridiculous, "do what you want." she hung up on him.[24]

On the previous day, 19 February, Barone had worked in the Philadelphia office at Hornstein's instance.[25] As previously found, in the Philadelphia office West had made no "deliveries" to customers since her 1982 phlebitis operation, and had made no "deliveries" to city hall since before the Philadelphia office was moved in April 1986. Moreover, Hornstein testified to the belief that at least after that move, West "never wanted—she would never go" on walks to the post office, and that she had taken only one such walk on an occasion when (he suspected) she also had personal business there. About 15 minutes after Hornstein's conversation with West on the morning of 20 February, Lovenworth telephoned the Norristown office and asked to speak to Barone. West, who had answered the telephone, replied that Barone was over at the courthouse. Lovenworth told West to have Barone call him when she came in. West did so, and Barone thereupon returned Lovenworth's call. The record contains no direct evidence about what was said during this conversation; company witness Barone was not asked about it and Lovenworth did not testify.

When this conversation ended, employee Robert Cleghorn, a title searcher, was in the process of getting lunch orders from all the employees. As he was about to head for a local McDonald's to pick up the various lunches, Barone told him to take West with him "to learn the delivery routes." No deliveries had been performed in the Norristown office while West was working there, and she had never heard of deliveries there. She told Barone that West did not do deliveries; that she had not done them in Philadelphia for about 4 years (which was true, as to making a "full delivery route" to customers); and that when she had been transferred to [22] Hornstein testified that Respondent's Bucks County office, in Doylestown, is 40 miles from Respondent's office. West Chester (where Respondent's Chester County office is located) and Media (where Respondent's Delaware County office is located) are about 14 and 11 miles, respectively, from Philadelphia's west city line. The record fails to show which, if any, of these three cities are served by public transportation from Philadelphia or West's home city of Lindenwold, New Jersey.

[23] My findings concerning this conversation are based on a composite of credible parts of the testimony of West and Hornstein. For demeanor reasons, I do not credit his testimony on direct examination that aside from what he testified to, nothing else happened in that conversation. When asked on cross-examination about whether he said certain things to West during that conversation, he testified, "I don't remember what I told her." I note that he did not testify that he told her she could not make up Norristown tardinesses by taking a shorter lunch period.

[24] My findings concerning the contents of this conversation are based on a composite of credible parts of Hornstein's and West's testimony. I note that although Hornstein initially testified that he hung up on her, he later corroborated her testimony that she hung up on him. Because Hornstein's version of the conversation (which he characterized as "very strange") contains no explanation for her statement (to which he testified) that she was going to get fired, and for demeanor reasons, I do not accept his denial of her testimony that he threatened her with discharge if she continued her union activity. Because Respondent failed to produce the attendance record of Roxanne, who Hornstein's testimony implies was in the office that day but according to West was not, I accept her testimony that this conversation occurred on 20 February, rather than his testimony that it occurred on 18 February.

[25] This finding is based on West's testimony, received without objection or limitation, that Roxanne so advised West when she telephoned the Norristown office on 19 February to say that she was not coming in.

Norristown, her letter had said that she would be doing the same type of job she had been doing in Philadelphia. Barone said, "You are not going to do the deliveries?" West said that it was not part of her job. Barone said that West had left Barone no choice, and she would have to call Hornstein.

Barone thereupon telephoned Hornstein and said, "Jack, I did what you said, and [West] refused." Hornstein said, "Ask her again."[26] Barone then said to West, "Will you do deliveries?" West said, "I do not do deliveries, I have not done them in years." Hornstein told Barone to let West go. Then, Barone told West, "Jack said you are fired, leave." West smiled, got her things, and said to Barone, "Will you put that in writing?" Barone said that West would have to ask Hornstein for that. Still smiling, West left the office. Respondent hired an employee to fill her Norristown job 2 or 3 weeks later.

My findings regarding the events that occurred in the Norristown office after Barone's return are based almost entirely on West's testimony. Barone testified for Respondent that Cleghorn was about to go on a delivery to Commonwealth Federal, she told West to accompany him on this delivery, and the purpose of these instructions was to make West familiar with Commonwealth Federal's location. Giving a consistent but more detailed account of the incident, employee Russo, who overheard the West-Barone conversation, testified for Respondent that Cleghorn was "going on deliveries," West was going out to lunch at McDonald's, and "Since deliveries is right across the street—the delivery was Commonwealth Federal, it is right across the street from McDonald's, Ms. [Barone] asked Ms. West if she would accompany Mr. Cleghorn to the deliveries in case she would have to do them." Russo's testimony in this respect implies that after working in the Norristown office for 3 days, West already knew the location of McDonald's, which is less than 2 blocks from the Norristown office and, according to Hornstein, is where the employees in that office usually eat. Under the circumstances as described by Russo, requiring West to accompany Cleghorn on the delivery would have been rather pointless; for, if and when she had been instructed to make a delivery to Commonwealth Federal herself, she could merely have been advised that it was across the street from McDonald's. Moreover, Hornstein's discredited testimony from time to time that Barone told him that West had refused to make a delivery to Commonwealth Federal is difficult to square with the discredited testimony of company witnesses Barone and Russo that it was Cleghorn who was supposed to make the delivery to Commonwealth Federal,[27] as well as West's credited testimony that no delivery at all was to be made on that occasion. In view of these considerations, and for demeanor reasons, I credit West, and to this incident do not accept the testimony of Barone, Russo, or Hornstein except as reflected in my findings or corroborated by West.

On an undisclosed date after West's discharge, she filed with a Pennsylvania government agency a claim for vacation pay for the week beginning 26 December 1986 (see supra, part II, A and C).[28] About a month later, she received in the mail a check for the amount she had requested. On 19 March 1987, the Pennsylvania office of employment security denied her 22 February application for unemployment compensation, on the ground that she had been discharged for "willful misconduct in connection with her work." On 4 May 1987, this decision was affirmed by a referee of the Pennsylvania unemployment compensation board of review, on the ground that she had refused without good cause to comply with a reasonable directive—namely, to accompany a fellow employee during his delivery in order to learn the route if she was ever required to make the delivery in the future. So far as the record shows, this decision was never appealed.

E. Alleged Further Interference, Restraint, and Coercion

As previously noted, employee Werner attended the union meeting organized by West, participated with West in handing out union cards on the sidewalk outside Respondent's office before working hours, and participated with West in obtaining union cards at lunch. On West's transfer, effective 17 February 1987, Werner was given West's job with a concomitant wage increase. A day or two after West's 20 February discharge, President Hornstein asked Werner to go to Company Vice President Lovenworth's office. While only Werner and Lovenworth were in the office, he asked her why she would be interested in a union. She said because she "thought they needed to get . . . some kind of ground with their sick days, vacations and stuff like that." During this conversation, which lasted about 20 minutes, Hornstein came into the room, and asked her why she would want the Union. Werner testified that "we were talking about what the Union is," and that Hornstein "was explaining to me that, you know, things like . . . you would, you know, pay, and you would be starting at minimum wage." She testified that she could not recall the reason, if any, he gave for why she would be starting at minimum wage. Hornstein was not asked about this conversation, and Lovenworth did not testify.[29]

---

[26] My finding that he said merely this is based on a composite of credible parts of Barone's testimony and his initial testimony about the conversation. She did not corroborate his testimony that he told her that everyone had to do deliveries. His initial version did not corroborate her testimony that he told her to tell West that she "had to go on the delivery" or she would be terminated; nor did West's credible testimony about Barone's remarks immediately afterward include any such statement. After Hornstein had heard Barone's testimony about this conversation, he gave versions that included the alleged termination threat.

[27] Hornstein so testified at certain points in his testimony. At other points, he testified, instead, that Barone told him West had refused to accompany another emrloyee on a delivery so she could learn where the delivery spot was. I do not believe this latter version either, in view of its inconsistency with his other version and for the reasons why I discredit the testimony of Barone and Russo about her instructions to West.

[28] My finding that this claim was filed after her discharge is based on inferences from her telephone conversation with Hornstein on the day she was discharged.

[29] At the time of the hearing, Werner was still working for Respondent in the position vacated by West's transfer. Werner testified for the General Counsel under subpoena.

F. Analysis and Conclusions

1. West's alleged supervisory status

As previously noted, President Hornstein's 13 February letter advising West of her transfer to Respondent's Norristown stated that her wages would not be changed "because responsibilities will be similar." Further, when the General Counsel asked him whether this letter "indicated to her that there would be no change in her job duties," he replied, "Right. She would basically do clerical work in the office."[30] Moreover, Respondent's counsel stated on the record that West occupied employee status after her transfer. In addition, Respondent's answer averred that "Respondent transferred its employee, Peggy West to its Norristown facility on February 13, 1987." Also, Respondent's counsel averred in his opening statement, "There is no question that Ms. West was an employee at Security Search for a period of nine or ten years"; West started working there in August 1976. However, Respondent contends that West occupied supervisory status between early 1986 and her transfer to Norristown. It is convenient to consider this contention at this point in the decision.

a. Facts

Vice President Lovenworth, Respondent's financial manager and one of its owners, handles Respondent's investments and real estate holdings, is in charge of Respondent's sales, establishes Respondent's price schedule, and does public relations work on Respondent's behalf. Company President Hornstein, one of Respondent's principal owners, is in charge of production and personnel, prices out the work, checks on complaints about the work, and reviews each title search to look for obvious discrepancies. Hornstein testified that it is he who handles "the personnel hiring, firing, talking," and that he sets the salary of "every employee who works for me," including supervisors.

Respondent employs about 80 persons, 64 of them in the Philadelphia office and the rest of them in Respondent's four branch offices. Respondent's personnel in its main (Philadelphia) office include Viola (the "plant" general manager), Office Manager Patterson, and Bill Webb (the head of the title department). Inferentially, all of these named individuals are directly under Hornstein.[31] Inferentially, the office managers who head each of Respondent's four branch offices are also directly under him. Respondent admits that Viola, Patterson, and Branch Office Managers Davis and Barone were supervisors within the meaning of the Act. Because of Hornstein's testimony that all the branch managers have the power to hire, and that Webb has the power effectively to recommend hiring, I find that all the branch managers and Webb were supervisors. The authority of Viola, Patterson, Webb, and the branch managers does not extend to firing employees.[32] Although Viola has the authority effectively to recommend discharge, the record fails to show whether the others possess this authority. Viola had keys to the Philadelphia office, but neither admitted Supervisor Patterson nor West had keys. All personnel, including supervisors, have the same pension plan, the same type of health care plan, and the same vacation schedule.

At least until about the beginning of 1987, Hornstein was West's immediate supervisor.[33] He testified that West "basically" did clerical work in the office. Her regular work station was at a desk in an unenclosed portion of Respondent's office area, near the desks (also in an unenclosed area) of Hornstein, Patterson, and employee Snodgrass, who was immediately under Supervisor Patterson and whose desk was back-to-back with hers. Werner, who according to Respondent was supervised by West, occupied a desk behind West's desk and to the left of Hornstein's desk. West addressed and sealed the mail; ran the copy machine; made sure the copies were run off; ordered supplies; stamped the recordings; stamped and logged the documents; took the prothonatory receipts, got them recorded, and sent them downstairs to Viola's department; and handled overflow telephone calls from customers and others. In addition, she divided the deliveries; arranged them in proper order; and put them into a basket, 12 to 15 feet from her own desk but near Hornstein's desk and next to the desk of employee Werner (whose duties then included making deliveries), from which the delivery persons removed them before starting delivery routes (see infra fn. 39).[34]

Respondent generally pays supervisors more than line employees. West was paid substantially less than admitted Supervisors Barone, Viola, and Patterson. West was paid $95 a week more than employee Werner, who worked with West, and was not paid less than any of the other employees who allegedly reported to her. When Werner took over West's job, Werner received a $35-per-week wage increase, which fixed her salary at $60 a week less than West had been receiving. Hornstein testified that in deciding the amount of Werner's raise, he took into account the fact that she had been working for Respondent for about 2 years (the last 9 months as a full-time employee), whereas West had worked for Respondent for more than 10 years. West was not invited to, and did not attend, a meeting about pensions, on an undisclosed date after April 1986, which was attended by all the persons whom I have previously found to be supervisors. It is undisputed that she never participated in the interview process, never suspended any employee or recommended such suspension to Hornstein, and never [30] The quotation is from p. 311 of the transcript, as corrected in my order regarding the General Counsel's motion to correct transcript.

[31] He testified that "I imagine" Patterson "works for me."

[32] This finding is based on Hornstein's testimony. Because I regard him as more knowledgeable in this area, I do not accept Patterson's testimony that she possesses authority to fire.

[33] Hornstein testified, but Patterson denied, that she was West's supervisor when West was transferred in February 1987. I find it unnecessary to resolve this issue.

[34] My findings regarding where West put the "deliveries" after arranging them in proper order are based on her testimony. In view of Hornstein's uncertainty concerning this matter, I do not accept his testimony that she put on a specific spot on her desk the recordings destined for city hall.

issued any warnings or recommended to Hornstein that such warnings be issued. Respondent contends that West had the authority, in Respondent's interest and in the exercise of independent judgment, responsibly to direct employees, effectively to recommend their discharge, and to discharge them. However, Respondent makes no claim that she possessed any of the other indicia of supervisory status specified in Section 2(11) of the Act.

Although Hornstein's testimony is somewhat uncertain as to West's job title, if any,[35] he testified on cross-examination that she was "head of the mail room" by the time of her last wage review, about February or March 1986, several months before Werner was assigned to work with her.[36] He credibly testified that during this interview, she asked for a higher increase than she received, and that she gave as the reason that she was "head of the mail room."[37] Hornstein further credibly testified that he so referred to her when reproaching her for what he regarded as an excessive amount of misaddressed outgoing mail. When asked "why [he had] made her the head of the mail room," he replied, in effect, that she was the only experienced employee who worked in the area, "So I did not have much choice." A few minutes later, when asked, "Did you make her head of the mail room?", he replied, "I did not make her. She did it herself by just getting the knowledge of knowing where all the customers were . . . . When we hired some delivery people and they were trainees, she was the most experienced, so she was the head." (However, Hornstein testified that he made Patterson a supervisor, and took into account her knowledge, her intelligence, her seniority, and her "loyalty" to Respondent—that is, that she was "very concerned" with the work, and "cared about" the work and the clients.) He went on to testify that when Respondent hired new employees to make deliveries, Respondent put West "in charge of them," a status that he described as introducing the new employee to West and saying, "This person will be doing deliveries for you. I think we told the person that they will report to [West] as far as the mails and the deliveries go . . . . [In 1985, we] hired high school students on a work program . . . introduced them and told them that [West] would be responsible for them; they would be able to help her, it would make her job easier." Further, he testified that a series of delivery persons, two or three at a time, "reported to" West, a term that he explained as "asking her where deliveries would go to, asking her how to do this, how to take an order, how to write an envelope up, where do I find this, where do I find this address, where do I find this stationery, should I take lunch, should I take my lunch on delivery, should I come back." He testified that concerning these employees, West had the "same [disciplinary authority] allowed to anybody training people and directing them; if she found mistakes, she corrected . . . . They came to her for questions." Similarly, regarding delivery person Charles Jones, West credibly testified that he would sometimes ask her where a certain place was, and she would tell him. After the April 1986 move to Pine Street, an undisclosed proportion of the "deliveries" consisting of recordings to be brought to and from city hall were made by employees (searchers, clerks, or title clerks) under Viola's supervision. West never worked with Viola in scheduling deliveries. Hornstein testified that Al Carr, a clerk or title clerk whose immediate supervisor was Viola, reported to West, a term that Hornstein explained as "He checked in with her, picked up the recordings from her."

Respondent contends that West responsibly directed, on Respondent's behalf and in the exercise of independent judgment, Werner and certain delivery persons. On a date before the April 1986 move to Pine Street but otherwise not clear in the record, Respondent began to send out from the Philadelphia office much of the mail that had previously been sent out by the branch offices. Hornstein told West that this change was going to affect her the most, and that he was going to get someone to give her a hand with the mail. Thereafter, but still before the office was moved, Werner, who at that time was a part-time employee, told West that Hornstein had sent up Werner to give West a hand with the mail. West credibly testified that thereafter and until her transfer to Norristown, after separating the mail, West would give Werner all the title searches that had to be sent to finance companies; to this extent, I accept Hornstein's testimony that West "decided between her and [Werner], who was going to handle what customers so far as mail goes." Werner was responsible for addressing all these titles searches to the appropriate finance companies, whose addresses were mostly listed on a Rolodex on West's desk.[38] However, West continued to address the title searches intended for banks, and to package the "deliveries" and put them into their basket. When called by the General Counsel as an adverse witness at the outset of the hearing, Hornstein testified that when West was working at the Philadelphia office, "we did have somebody that was working in the mail room with her . . . that did know how to when [West] was not in, do the recordings, address the mail, run the copy machine, make sure the delivery is done, divide the deliveries up into the proper envelopes, stamp the recordings, take the prothonotary receipts, get them recorded. We did have [35] When called as the first witness by the General Counsel as an adverse witness under Rule 611(c) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, he testified that her job title was "mail room clerk and phone answerer." When testifying for Respondent, Hornstein testified that she was "the supervisor" or "the head" of the "mail room." Office Manager Denise Patterson, who according to Hornstein (but not her) was West's immediate superior when she was transferred, testified that West was head of the mail department. West testified that about 1982, Lovenworth gave her the job title of "customer service representatives." Although her testimony in this respect about what Lovenworth did is uncontradicted, Hornstein denied that this was her job title. Werner, who succeeded to West's job when West was transferred, testified that Werner had never had a title at Security, and had never had the title of supervisor of the mailroom.

[36] Hornstein testified that he gave Patterson a wage increase when she became office manager, but did not give Barone an "immediate raise" when she became manager of the Norristown office, admittedly a supervisory job.

[37] In view of the probabilities of the case, I accept his testimony in this respect, rather than her testimony otherwise. However, I do accept her uncontradicted testimony that she never so described herself to Werner.

[38] Hornstein testified, in effect, that he complained to West in and before January 1987 when Werner made what he regarded as an excessive number of mistakes; but Werner continued to perform such work and, as previously noted, was given West's job on her transfer in February 1987.

somebody that did know the exact same job." I infer that he was referring to Werner.

After the office was moved to Pine Street, the deliveries were made by Werner; by employees (searchers, clerks, and title clerks) supervised by Viola, with whom West did not consult; and by a series of delivery persons among whom there was a rapid turnover, with one or two at a time working for Respondent. Hornstein testified that West stopped making deliveries on the move to Pine Street because "we" (inferentially, referring to persons in management, and not referring to West) thought that "what she knew was more valuable inside than walking around; especially with what we were paying her at that time." However, he credibly testified, in effect, that he raised no objections on one occasion, after the move, when she elected to walk to the post office herself, rather than leave it to a delivery person, in order to have the stamp machine filled; Hornstein testified to the suspicion that she had some personal business to transact there. To this extent, I accept his testimony that when he told her that he needed someome to go to the post office, "it would be up to her discretion as to who to send, or if she wanted to go herself."

Ordinarily, the delivery persons ascertained what to deliver and where to deliver it merely by taking packages of addressed documents from the basket. West would occasionally tell Werner to make deliveries, but did not tell this to any of the other delivery persons (most, if indeed not all, of whom were part time, going to school, and/or with only brief tenures of employment), or to the searchers, clerks, or title clerks.[39] In accordance with instructions issued by Hornstein with respect to anyone in the office who had nothing else to do, on completing their deliveries the delivery persons, ordinarially without specific instructions from West, would seal envelopes, run the meter machine, run the copy machine, or perform filing. However, West occasionally asked Werner, at least, to do certain tasks. Werner credibly testified that West sometimes assisted her by training her or telling her how to do a job in a particular way. Hornstein testified that West used to train employees, a process that he described as physically showing employees where the envelopes and the stamp machine were, and which of Respondent's three Rolodexes listed the addresses of banks, lawyers, and finance companies respectively. He further testified on direct examination that the delivery persons reported directly to West and West reported directly to him. On cross-examination, he explained that by so testifying concerning West, he meant that if she was going to be out sick, she was supposed to notify him. No employee has ever been told specifically to ask for West when calling in sick. I accept West's testimony that the delivery persons reported directly to Hornstein.

[39] My findings in the last two sentences are based on credible parts of West's and Werner's testimony. For demeanor reasons, I discredit West's testimony regarding Werner that she never asked anyone except Anne Marie Kostik (see infra) to make a delivery. Hornstein's testimony that West had authority to send people from place to place, decided whom to send on deliveries, and "directed the delivery people who would take deliveries" is discredited except to the extent indicated in these two sentences and my findings infra in connection with the Kostik incident.

As previously noted, Hornstein testified that the authority to discharge was not possessed by the branch managers, Webb and Patterson, and did not testify that this authority was possessed by Viola or anyone else except Hornstein and Lovenworth. Specifically, Hornstein did not testify in terms that West had the authority to discharge. However, Respondent seems to contend that possession of such authority by West is shown by the circumstances surrounding the separation of employee Tracey Browning (see infra, fn. 40). Regarding the circumstances of her separation, the credible evidence shows as follows: On an undisclosed date before her separation, which took place about early July 1986, Hornstein remarked to West that he wanted to fire Browning because she would not say good morning to him and did not smile. Also, on an undisclosed date or dates before Browning's separation, Supervisor Patterson overheard complaints from employees about Browning's work or uncooperative attitude. On a day in about only July 1986, when Hornstein was absent from the Philadelphia office, West asked Browning to take a particular document with her on her delivery route. When Browning refused, on the ground that she already had too many to take, West asked Vice President Lovenworth whether he wanted Browning to deliver this document notwithstanding her heavy workload. Lovenworth said yes, whereupon West brought the document to Browning and told her that Lovenworth wanted her to take it on her delivery route. After West had briefly left her desk, she returned to find the document there. West reported this to Lovenworth, and went on to say that she could not deal with Browning any more, that she was being uncooperative about making deliveries, and that West wanted to let Browning go and get somebody else. Lovenworth said that he was too busy to bother with "this childish stuff [about] delivering something or not delivering something," and told West that she should take Browning into the conference room, that the two women should work it out, and that West, on his behalf, should tell Browning to take the document with her on her delivery route. Then, West took Browning into the conference room and said, "Tracey, its just one more stop that you have to make today. Would you take it?" After complaining that she had too much work to do, Browning mumbled something, left the conference room, and went downstairs. After she had been unaccountably absent for about a half hour, Lovenworth unsuccessfully had her paged. A few minutes later, he received the report that she had walked out. Lovenworth then asked West what she had said to Browning; West replied that she told Browning what Lovenworth had told her to say. Thereafter, Hornstein, who had been absent from the Philadelphia office during this incident, came over to West's desk and remarked, "I heard Tracey's not here." When West said yes, Hornstein said, "Well, now I don't have to fire her."

My findings regarding this incident are based on a composite of credible parts of the testimony of employee Bob Brown and Supervisor Patterson (both of whom observed some of the events that occurred outside the conference room) and West. Hornstein testified that on his return to the Philadelphia office, West told him,

"They're calling me the hatchet. I'm getting as bad as you," and started to laugh. Hornstein went on to testify that he then turned around to Lovenworth and asked him what happened, to which Lovenworth replied, "I have no idea, I just saw [Browning] bolt out the conference room, down the steps, and we have not seen her since." Respondent contends that I should credit President Hornstein's testimony in this respect, and discredit all inconsistent testimony by West, on the ground that although West eventually testified, in effect, that Browning quit, West initially testified that Hornstein fired Browning for not saying good morning to him. However, Respondent unexplainedly failed to call Vice President Lovenworth as a witness. On balance, and after considering the witnesses' demeanor, I credit West, including her testimony that she did not tell Browning in the conference room that West was firing her, and West's denial of Hornstein's testimony that she told him, in Lovenworth's presence, that she had fired Browning and was being referred to as a "hatchet man."[40]

As previously noted, Hornstein did not testify in terms that any of his subordinates, except Viola, had the authority effectively to recommend discharge. However, Respondent contends that West possessed that authority. Respondent relies on the following incident: On an occasion about late July 1986 when Respondent was short of delivery people, Hornstein asked West to go downstairs and see whether Supervisor Viola could spare anyone to help with deliveries. When she told Viola that "we" needed somebody to help with the deliveries, he said that he too was short-handed, but that she could ask Anne Marie Kostik, whose regular job was a file clerk on the first floor under Viola.[41] Then, West asked Kostik if she would help making deliveries. Kostick, who 2 days earlier had helped in making deliveries, said that she would not, explaining that she got sick when she had to take an elevator. West shook her head, sucked her teeth, and went upstairs, where she told Hornstein that Kostik would not make deliveries because elevators made her sick. Then, Hornstein went downstairs and asked Kostik to please do him a favor and make a delivery for him. She said that she could not, because she got sick on elevators. Pointing to the door, he told her that she would have to leave, that Respondent had no room for her there. Then, he came back up and said that Kostik was no longer with the Company. Kostik had begun working for Respondent about September 1985 as a part-time employee, and had become a full-time employee after the 1985–1986 school year ended.

My findings regarding Kostik incident are based on a composite of credible parts of the testimony of West, Hornstein, and employee Leslie Pogue, who was present during West's and Hornstein's conversations with Kostik. Because Kostik did not ordinarily work with West and had previously helped to make deliveries, and for demeanor reasons, I credit West's denial of Hornstein's testimony that West told him, "I cannot take this any more, these people will not listen, you got to get rid of her." Because Pogue testified that Hornstein "came down" to talk to Kostik, I do not accept Hornstein's testimony that he addressed Kostik from the landing while he was standing with West, and credit West's testimony that she did not accompany him down the steps. Because Pogue's memory appeared superior to West's memory, I accept Pogue's testimony about Kostik's explanation for not doing deliveries, and infer that this explanation (rather than the "not feeling well" explanation to which West testified) was the one that West reported to Hornstein.

b. Analysis and conclusions

Section 2(11) of the Act defines the term "supervisor" as "any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment." Possession of any one of these enumerated functions is sufficient to confer supervisory status. NLRB v. Baja's Place, 773 F.2d 416, 420 (6th Cir. 1984); Spring Valley Farms, 272 NLRB 1323, 1324 (1984).

However, the only such function even arguably present under the credited evidence is the power responsibly to direct other employees. I agree with the General Counsel that West's minimal direction of other employees did not constitute a supervisory function. Which other employees were to deliver particular documents, and where they were to be taken, depended almost always on the kinds of and addresses on documents in the basket when an employee was ready to leave on a delivery. Nor did West ordinarily issue any specific instructions to delivery persons to perform particular tasks when they had no delivery work to do. I find that West's division between herself and Werner of the task of addressing title searches, the incident where West elected to go from the Pine Street office to the post office herself to have the stamp machine filled and (perhaps) to perform personal business, rather than leave the stamp-machine errand to a delivery person (although by that time West was supposed to and did remain in the office almost all the time), and her occasional instructions to Werner to make a particular delivery or to perform a particular task, did not require the use of independent judgment, but instead were of a merely routine or clerical nature.[42] Accordingly, I find that West was [40] Although Respondent's posthearing brief asserts that West fired Browning, the evidence most favorable to Respondent shows at most that West took it on herself to tell Browning that she was fired, whereupon Browning left the premises without consulting anyone else. There is no other evidence that West had the authority to fire anyone, and Respondent's attorney stated during his opening statement that Browning was terminated at West's request.

[41] My findings in these two sentences are based on West's testimony, partly corroborated by Hornstein. Because Viola was not called as a witness, I do not accept the implication in Hornstein's testimony that it was West who selected Kostik as the person to perform deliveries.

[42] Central Freight Lines v. NLRB, 653 F.2d 1023, 1025 (5th Cir. 1981); Gem Urethane Corp., 284 NLRB 1349, 1358 (1987); Laborers Local 341 (Bannister-Joyce Leonard), 223 NLRB 917, 919 (1976), enfd. 564 F.2d 834 (9th Cir. 1977); George C. Foss Co. v. NLRB, 752 F.2d 1407, 1410–1411 (9th Cir. 1985); Williams Litho Service, 260 NLRB 773, 791–792 (1982); Washington Post Co., 254 NLRB 168, 178–179 (1981).

an employee within the meaning of Section 2(3) of the Act, rather than a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11).

This conclusion gains further support from the evidence that West was paid substantially less than admitted Supervisors Barone, Patterson, and Viola; that West's successor was paid even less because she had been with Respondent for a much shorter time; that when transferring West to an admittedly nonsupervisory job in the Norristown office, Respondent told her that her responsibilities would be similar and that her wages would not be changed; that she was not asked to attend the pension meeting attended by all admitted supervisors; and that when Hornstein testified that Werner, whom West allegedly supervised, knew how to perform West's "exact same job," he described West's job without mentioning any even arguably supervisory duties. West did not, of course, exercise supervisory authority by giving occasional instruction and direction to her fellow employees; or by answering their questions based on her experience, correcting their mistakes, and training them to perform their relatively unskilled duties.[43]

2. The allegedly unlawful transfer

In February or March 1986, West expressed the opinion to Company President Hornstein that the wage increase she was given in consequence of her periodic wage review was inadequate. About early January 1987, she complained to Hornstein and to Company Vice President Lovenworth about Respondent's failure to pay her for her 1-week vacation beginning 26 December 1986, although part of this was her second week of vacation, it had been approved by Respondent several months in advance, and she had otherwise formally received less than the 2 weeks' paid vacation that employees with her seniority normally received. Although about July 1986 Hornstein had at least implied to her that the time which she was losing because of her daughter's hospitalization would not be deducted form her pay, and she had in fact received 1 day's paid vacation in late November 1986 and after her daughter had left the hospital, in January 1987 Lovenworth told West that this lost time was the reason she was not being paid for her December 1986 vacation. During these conversations about her vacation pay, she screamed at Hornstein and told him that she was going to go to the "unemployment board" about the matter.

Thereafter, in early February 1987, West arranged for a meeting between Union Representative Henninger and employees West, Werner, and Snodgrass. This meeting, where all three employees signed authorization cards and received blank cards to distribute to others, was held on the evening of 10 February. On 11 February, before the workday began, West and Werner stationed themselves on the sidewalk near Respondent's place of business. As Respondent's employees approached the office, West and Werner called them over, stated that West and Werner were trying to get a set policy in the office on vacation and sick days and raises, and asked the other employees to sign union cards. In consequence, 10 or 15 of the 64 employees in the Philadelphia office accepted cards, and at least one signed a card on the spot. Later that same day, West, Werner, and Snodgrass met with others during a luncheon gathering where union cards were accepted by two more employees, both of whom had used the office telephone during working hours to ask West about the Union, and both of whom signed union cards. On that same day, during a work-related telephone conversation with Supervisor Davis at Respondent's Bucks County office, West said that she would send union cards out there to the employees. Also on 11 February, Supervisor Patterson learned of the organizing movement and reported it to Supervisor Viola, and West advised Viola that she was one of those who were trying to organize a union and that she wanted to talk about the Union to the title searchers outside working hours.

During this organizing campaign, which took place while Hornstein was on vacation in Florida, he telephoned at least the Philadelphia office to check on the state of the business. When his plane from Florida landed at the Philadelphia airport, he proceeded directly from the airport to Respondent's Philadelphia establishment. Immediately on entering the building, he admittedly discussed West with Supervisor Viola, whom West had told that she was trying to organize a union. Immediately after this discussion with Viola, Hornstein admittedly discussed West with Lovenworth in the presence of Patterson, who had discussed the union campaign with Viola. A few minutes later, Hornstein telephoned Barone, the office manager of Respondent's Norristown office, and told her that on the next working day West would start work in Norristown with duties that he did not specify. The Norristown office did not at that time have a spot for West; and because of the distance between West's home and the Norristown office, Barone admittedly did not think that West would actually report to work there. Moreover, Hornstein had good reason to entertain the same opinion: he believed that her transfer would likely require her to extend her previous commuting time by the time needed for an additional 20-mile trip from Philadelphia by public transportation, and was well aware that West's need to administer therapy required by her daughter's chronic illness had frequently delayed West's arrival at work even in Philadelphia and otherwise placed unusual strain on her time, energy, and emotions. The day after West started to work in the Norristown office, Hornstein accused her of using Respondent's phones for union activities, and forbade her to use Respondent's phones. When her response about using only noncompany phones for "union calls" suggested an intention to continue at Norristown the union activity that she had begun in Philadelphia, he said that he was going to transfer her to the other company offices, whereupon she said that she would hand cards out there, too. A few days later, Vice President Lovenworth, with whom Hornstein had admittedly discussed West immediately before transferring her, remarked to a business associate that Respondent had transferred West to Norristown, she was disrupting the office in regards to forming a union. A week or so later, and an hour or two before West's discharge, Hornstein told her that if she did not stop all this union activity he was going to fire her.

[43] Daniel's Pallet Service, 282 NLRB 34, 37 (1987); Gem Urethane, supra at 1358; Health Care Logistics, 273 NLRB 822, 824–825 (1984), enfd. in relevant part 784 F.2d 232 (6th Cir. 1986); Teamsters Local 574, 259 NLRB 344, 347–349 (1981); J. J. Newberry Co., 249 NLRB 991 (1980), modified with specific approval as to the supervisory issue 645 F.2d 148, 154–155 (2d Cir. 1981); Cobra Gunskin, 267 NLRB 264, 266–267 (1983).

Notwithstanding Hornstein's testimony that he and his father had been union men and he himself had "deep respect for unions and their rights," the foregoing sequence of events constitutes a prima facie showing that in transferring West from Philadelphia to Norristown, Respondent was motivated at least in part by her union activity. Wayne Construction, 259 NLRB 571, 574 (1981). Although West was replaced by Werner, who had also passed out union cards, there is no evidence that Respondent knew until after promoting Werner that she, too, had been active in the union movement;[44] Werner had been less active than West; and the removal of both of them from the Philadelphia office would have left that office with nobody but Hornstein who knew how to handle the mail. In any event, a discriminatory motive, once established, is not disproved by an employer's proof that it did not weed out all union adherents. NLRB v. Instrument Corp., 714 F.2d 324, 330 (4th Cir. 1983); Master Security Services, 270 NLRB 543, 552 (1984); Wayne Construction, supra at 574. Accordingly, a finding that this transfer violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act is called for unless Respondent can meet the burden of showing that she would have been transferred in any event for lawful reasons.[45] I find that Respondent has failed to sustain that burden.

When called by the General Counsel as an adverse witness at the outset of the hearing, Hornstein testified that he transferred West (1) because she had taken an unauthorized vacation on 12 and 13 February; (2) because her daughter's illness caused West to be constantly late, and from time to time to telephone in the morning that she would not be in that day; (3) because, after she had failed about February 1986 to obtain as great a wage increase as she wanted, her attitude had been deteriorating and "her supervisor" (he elsewhere testified that West's supervisor was Patterson) had told him that in his absence, West was "disruptive" and would stop answering the phones; and (4) because the Norristown office needed "somebody . . . that knew what they were talking about to answer the phone" and during his 13 February conversation with Norristown Manager Barone, she told him that Norristown employee "Denise [Dirkson] just was not doing her job in there, and [Barone] was afraid to leave her alone in the office to answer any calls." When called by Respondent as a witness, Hornstein testified that beginning about February 1986, West's job performance went downhill. More specifically, he testified that in his presence, West failed to answer overflow telephone calls until he told her to do so (as previously noted, he earlier testified to reports from her supervisor that West "would stop answering the phones" in his absence); and that West personally sent to the wrong banks what he believed to be an unreasonably large amount of mail. On cross-examination by the General Counsel, he further testified that he took into account what he believed to be West's failure to make up the time she lost by being late and taking long lunchbreaks.

Regarding West's vacation on 12 and 13 February, the uncontradicted evidence shows that Lovenworth gave West permission to take this vacation.[46] Because of Respondent's unexplained failure to call Lovenworth and Viola as witnesses, and its unexplained failure to ask Patterson about the matter, I do not credit either Hornstein's uncorroborated testimony that Lovenworth untruthfully advised him otherwise in Patterson's presence and just before West's transfer, Hornstein's uncorroborated testimony that Patterson untruthfully so advised him on an undisclosed date, or Hornstein's uncorroborated testimony that just before his conversation with Lovenworth, when asked by Hornstein how things had been going during his 4-1/2 days of vacation, Viola said, "fine, but I [illegible]ted to let you know [West] took another vacation, and [illegible]ovenworth] was short handed." Concerning tardiness and absences because of her daughter's chronic illness, and West's alleged failure to make up the time she lost because of tardiness and extended lunchbreaks, West had been thus missing time for this reason for almost 10 years before her transfer. Regarding the alleged reports from Patterson about West, Patterson did not corroborate Hornstein's testimony about her alleged reports that in his absence West was disruptive and failed to answer the telephone or his testimony that Patterson tried to get West to answer the phones, testified that there was no particular pattern about when she would answer the phone, described merely as "uncooperative" her behavior and her performance during about the last year of her employment,[47] and (contrary to Hornstein) denied being West's supervisor. Moreover, concerning answering practices, Patterson testified that they had been the same throughout the period when she was able to observe West's work—that is, 1977–1987 except for 1985. Regarding the Norristown office's alleged need for someone to answer the phone intelligently in view of Dirkson's alleged deficiencies, Barone did not corrobo-

[44] Indeed, Hornstein testified that his decision to replace West with Werner was made before he learned that a union organizing campaign was going on.

[45] NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393, 401–404 (1983); Hanlon & Wilson Co. v. NLRB, 738 F.2d 606, 610 (3d Cir. 1984); Garrison Valley Center, 277 NLRB 1422 (1985); Schurpack, Inc., 283 NLRB 188 fn. 1 (1987).

[46] Indeed, Respondent paid her for these 2 days of vacation in February 1987 even though she had threatened to "sue" Respondent for vacation pay for a 5-day December 1986–January 1987 vacation, which included 2 days in 1987. In view of Respondent's failure (until after her discharge and her appeal to a government agency) to pay her for any part of this 1986–1987 vacation, I do not accept Hornstein's testimony that she was paid for her 2-day February 1987 vacation because she was entitled to 10 days' vacation pay and 5 days' sick pay a year. Indeed, Hornstein testified that when he denied her request to be paid for this December 1986–January 1987 vacation as part of her 1987 vacation, he told her that without special permission, vacation had to be taken after 1 June.

[47] Although Patterson's direct testimony in this respect is open to the interpretation that she was comparing West's last year of performance (February 1986 to February 1987) with West's performance during the previous year, Patterson elsewhere testified, in effect, that in 1985 she had no opportunity to observe West's work.

rate Hornstein's testimony that she so advised him, or testify to any deficiencies on Dirkson's part; in any event, Hornstein's testimony that West was transferred partly to supply the Norristown office with an intelligent phone-answerer when nobody else was in the office is difficult to reconcile with his further testimony that he transferred her partly because he believed that she was refusing to answer the telephones in Philadelphia. I note, moreover, the testimony of Patterson (who had an opportunity to observe West's work during her last year of employment) that West was good at doing the mail; Hornstein's testimony that doing the mail is a necessary part of his business and West had "made herself invaluable in the mail room," and his further testimony that she was one of the 10 percent of Respondent's staff who came in without pay, to help Respondent rearrange the furniture, on a Saturday following Respondent's April 1986 move to Pine Street.

As previously noted, Respondent's letter of transfer to West stated that she was being immediately transferred to Norristown from Philadelphia "Due to the increase in work load in our Norristown office and the decrease of our work load in our Philadelphia office." Respondent does not appear to contend that this consideration played any part in West's transfer; indeed, Norristown Office Manager Barone did not testify that this office was shorthanded or that she ever so advised Hornstein, and Hornstein at one point testified that he did not receive her alleged report to this effect until after he had had the transfer letter typed and arrangements were being made to send it out as certified mail. Hornstein testified that although the "work" in Norristown had increased, the "work" in Philadelphia had either stayed the same or increased somewhat (although less than in Norristown). He further testified that although the work in the Philadelphia mail room had "decreased a little, compared to Norristown" (owning to the use of Panafax), the Philadelphia office still needed, at the time of West's transfer, at least two employees to handle the mail. Further, he testified that the day West started working in Norristown, Werner started to perform West's old job and Respondent advertised for an employee to perform Werner's old job assisting West, and that such a replacement was obtained "shortly afterwards."[48] In other words, West's transfer to Norristown effective 17 February left the Philadelphia mail operation shorthanded by at least one employee until Werner's replacement was obtained, while on 17 February there was no spot for West in Norristown until after Dirkson's unexpected resignation a half hour after West's arrival and West had practically no work to do that day.

For the foregoing reasons, I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by transferring West from its Philadelphia office to its Norristown office. I do not credit Horntein's testimony that he did not learn about West's union activity until after her transfer, in view of the uncontradicted testimony that Lovenworth attributed her transfer to her union activity; Respondent's failure to call as witnesses either Lovenworth or Viola, although Hornstein talked to both of them before transferring West and at the time of this conversation Viola knew about her union activity; Respondent's failure to ask Supervisor Patterson about this Hornstein-Lovenworth conversation, although she was within earshot and had previously discussed the union movement with Viola; and demeanor considerations. See Walton Mfg. Co., 369 U.S. 404, 408 (1962).

3. The allegedly unlawful change in West's working conditions; her allegedly unlawful discharge

In determining Respondent's motive for its posttransfer actions in changing West's working conditions and then discharging her, I find, as an initial matter, that when advising West for antiunion reasons that she was being transferred to Respondent's Norristown office, Respondent anticipated that she would refuse to accept the transfer and, in consequence, would no longer be in Respondent's employ. I so find because the supervisor of the Norristown office, Barone, admittedly expected West to refuse the transfer for the reason that it called for a 20-mile 1-day increase in her commuting distance; because when West was transferred to and reported to work in Norristown, Respondent had no spot for her there; and because Company President Hornstein, who ordered the transfer, knew that even with the relatively short commute to Philadelphia a good deal of West's time and energy was consumed by her daughter's chronic illness.

I conclude that Hornstein's action on the second day of West's unexpected and unwelcome presence in the Norristown office, in advising her that she would thereafter be docked for tardiness rather than be permitted to make up the lost time by working during her lunch hour, was likewise motivated by a desire to get rid of her because of her union activity. I so conclude because of Hornstein's gratuitous assertion, during that same conversation, that she was using the telephones for union activities; because, when she denied this but tacitly admitted to making "union calls" on noncompany phones, he told her that her need to administer therapy to her daughter for her chronic illness had caused West to be frequently tardy even when she had been commuting only to Philadelphia rather than to the more distant Norristown. Hornstein testified, in effect, that he had not previously been concerned about her frequent tardiness, even when she failed to make it up, because "I was a little sympathetic to [Kelly's] disease. I understood, it was a young kid, so the ten minutes did not seem that important in the Philadelphia office." Moreover, the record indicates that Hornstein had been following the practice of disregarding short tardiness in the branch offices, as well as in Philadelphia; and that in Norristown, as well as in Philadelphia, employees had as a matter of practice been permitted to make up tardiness by shortening their lunch periods.

Further, the credible evidence shows that Respondent discharged West because of her union activity. Because of her union activity, Respondent had tried to rid itself of West by transferring her effective 17 February to an office whose location substantially increased her commuting time; by telling her on 18 February that her pay would thereafter be docked for tardiness, which Kelly's needed therapy made almost inevitable from time to time; and by threatening on 18 February to transfer West to other county offices at least one of which was twice as far as Norristown from Philadelphia. After West told Hornstein that at these offices she would continue to hand out union cards, and after Kelly's illness had caused West to lose a day of work and she told Hornstein that she was going to use the Union's services to obtain her week's disputed vacation pay, Hornstein told her that if she did not stop all this union activity, he was going to fire her, to which she replied that she was going to "get" him for blocking a union.

[48] Initially, he testified that to replace Werner, "we put an ad in right away. We hired Joann Goings." Later, he testified that to replace Werner, he transferred an employee named Anne Marie from "billing." He went on to testify, "I put an ad in the paper. I think I had two ads in the paper. I think we got a clerk, a kid that looked like he would be a good clerk"; and that after "shopping around for a while," Respondent hired a woman named Michelle to fill Anne Marie's slot in "billing."

President Hornstein knew that West had not performed a "full delivery route" (or, indeed, made any deliveries) to customers since her 1982 phlebitis operation, and that since that operation, she had been reluctant to take long walks.[49] Shortly after his conversation with West, Vice President Lovenworth, and/or Hornstein, instructed Barone to lead West to believe she would be expected to make a "delivery route" at Norristown, and to require West to walk with another employee to McDonald's to learn the "delivery route," even though no delivery had to be made at that time, West already knew McDonald's location, and it was right across the street from Commonwealth Federal, Respondent's customer.[50] Deliveries in Norristown are much less frequent, involve much shorter distances, and are much less time consuming than in Philadelphia; more specifically, in Norristown most deliveries are made to a customer or customers a block or two away from the office; Dirkson, whom West replaced, made deliveries only twice a week; and even the employee who "predominantly" makes the deliveries makes fewer than one a day.[51] Nonetheless, Barone, who before transferring to Norristown had worked in the Philadelphia office for 5 years, described this Norristown function to West as "the delivery route," which in Philadelphia meant deliveries to 30 to 50 customers and took 2 to 5 hours;[52] and made no effort to assure West that Norristown "deliveries" involved walks of two to four blocks less often than once a day. Instead, Barone immediately telephoned Hornstein that she had done "what you said" and that West had refused. Moreover, without asking Barone whether she had explained the limited nature of Norristown deliveries or suggesting that she do so, Hornstein merely told Barone to ask her again, and Barone then merely asked "will you do deliveries?" When West again said no, Hornstein told Barone to discharge West. The foregoing evidence persuades me that Respondent drew the deliveries function to West's attention at an unnaturally early time, and by careful and intentional silence misled her regarding the kind and amount of work it involved in Norristown, in the hope and expectation that she would express the intention not to perform this function, and thereby provide Respondent with a plausible pretext for discharging her immediately, and before she could carry out her intention, which she had expressed to Hornstein 2 days earlier, to solicit union cards in the county offices too. Accordingly, I find that her discharge violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. Although it is true that Hornstein had discharged employee Kostik about 7 months earlier for refusing to help make deliveries in Philadelphia, Respondent had had an immediate and genuine need for such assistance and Kostik had been working for Respondent for less than a year (mostly as a part-time employee), while West had been working for Respondent for more than 10 years.[53]

4. The alleged independent violation of Section 8(a)(1)

I agree with the General Counsel that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when Supervisor Viola told employee West, on 11 February, that if a union came in, the title searchers' wages would be immediately lowered to some sort of uniform scale that would be lower than what they were making now. Although it is true that West then told Viola that she did not believe it, the record fails to show whether she adhered to this view after mature consideration, and after she was later subjected to unlawful antiunion treatment by President Hornstein and Vice President Lovenworth. In any event, "the test of interference, restraint and coercion under Section 8(a)(1) of the Act does not depend on . . . the successful effect of the coercion. Rather, the illegality of an employer's conduct is determined by whether the conduct may reasonably be said to have a tendency to interfere with the free exercise of employee rights under the Act." Wago, Inc., 273 NLRB 746, 748 (1984). Accord: El Rancho Market, 235 NLRB 468, 471 (1978), enfd. 603 F.2d 223 (9th Cir. 1979). A threat to reduce wages in the event of unionization reasonably can be said

[49] He testified that after the office was moved to Pine Street, she "would never go" to the post office to have the stamp machine filled, and that on only one occasion had she taken the stamp machine there herself rather than leaving this task to someone else. The Pine Street office is about seven blocks from the post office. City hall, where West took documents until shortly before the move to Pine Street, is about 4 blocks from the Sansom Street office but about 12 blocks from the Pine Street office.

[50] My findings as to the contents of the Lovenworth-Barone conversation are based on inferences from Barone's conduct immediately thereafter, and from her telephoned report to Hornstein that "I did what you said, and [West] refused." As previously noted, company witness Barone was not asked about the contents of her telephone conversation with Lovenworth, and he did not testify.

[51] No deliveries were made at the Norristown office during West's 3-1/2 days there. Title clerk Russo made five deliveries during 150 days that he worked in the Norristown office. However, Barone testified that he does not make deliveries as frequently as some other employees.

[52] Deliveries of searches made by the Norristown office for customers in central Philadelphia are made by the Philadelphia office.

[53] In connection with the cases cited supra fn. 45, I note that Respondent has tendered no lawful reason for West's discharge other than the reason, which I have found pretextual, that she said she would not perform deliveries. Similarly, Respondent has tendered no lawful reason for changing West's working conditions as to tardiness other than the reason, which I have found pretextual, that Norristown did not follow the Philadelphia practice as to making up tardiness—a claim without evidentiary support. See Limestone Apparel Corp., 255 NLRB 772 (1981), enfd. 705 F.2d 799 (6th Cir. 1982).

to have such a tendency. Because Viola was admittedly a supervisor and his subordinates included the title searches whose existing wage scale he threatened, I reject Respondent's contention that he was not Respondent's agent for the purpose of binding Respondent to such threats. Glenroy Construction Co., 215 NLRB 866, 867 (1974), enfd. 527 F.2d 465 (7th Cir. 1975); Collectramatic, Inc., 267 NLRB 866, 871 (1983).

In addition, I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when (1) on 18 February, President Hornstein (a) told employee West, because of her union activity, that her wages would be docked if she was late, (b) told her that she could not use Respondent's phones because of her union activity, and (c) threatened to transfer her to other county offices because of her union activities, and (2) on 20 February, Hornstein threatened to discharge West if she continued to engage in union activities. However, I find the evidence insufficient to support the General Counsel's contention that about 22 February, Hornstein threatened employee Werner that employees' wages would be reduced if the Union came in.

I agree with the General Counsel that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) when President Hornstein and Vice President Lovenworth each asked employee Werner why she would want, and be interested in, a union. In so finding, I rely on the fact that Hornstein asked Werner to go to Lovenworth's office for this interview; that Hornstein and Lovenworth are Respondent's principal officers and were the only ones present aside from Werner; that Werner had participated with West in much of West's overt union activity; that Werner had replaced West when her union activity led to West's transfer; that this union activity had thereafter led to West's discharge; and that it was only a day or two later that Hornstein and Lovenworth questioned Werner about her own union activity. See Morgan Services, 284 NLRB 862, 863 (1987). For the reasons summarized supra, part II,F,1 in connection with Respondent's contention that West was a statutory supervisor, I find that Werner (her successor) was not a supervisor either and, therefore, reject Respondent's contention that its questioning of Werner was not unlawful because of her alleged supervisory status.

However, I do not find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) when Supervisor Patterson questioned employee Snodgrass about the Union. It is true that Snodgrass was one of the three employees (the others being discriminatee West and the unlawfully interrogated Werner) who attended the union meeting and obtained union cards from other employees. Also, it is true that (unlike West and Werner) Snodgrass did not engage in union activity where management would predictably be able to observe her, that Patterson's relationship to Snodgrass was solely that of a supervisor to an immediate subordinate rather than including personal friendship, and that (as far as the record shows) Patterson did not give Snodgrass any reason for asking her what she thought of the Union and whether she wanted to join a union. However, the conversation occurred on the street, Patterson was a first-line supervisor, and there is no evidence that she either knew about Snodgrass' union activity or professed any such knowledge to Snodgrass. I read the most recent Board precedents as pointing to the conclusion that such questioning did not violate Section 8(a)(1). See Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217 (1985); Bates Nitewear Co., 283 NLRB 1128 (1987).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. At all material times, Peggy West has been an employee within the meaning of Section 2(3) of the Act.
4. Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by transferring employee West, by changing her terms and conditions of employment with respect to making up lateness, and by discharging her.
5. Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening, because of West's union activities, to dock her wages if she was late; by threatening to transfer her because of her union activities; by telling West that she could not use Respondent's phones because of her union activities, by threatening to discharge West if she continued her union activities; by threatening to reduce employees' wages if a union came in; by interrogating employee Werner about the Union.
6. The unfair labor practices summarized in Conclusions of Law 5 affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
7. Respondent has not violated the Act by threatening employee Werner or interrogating employee Snodgrass.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has violated the Act in certain respects, I shall recommend that Respondent be required to cease and desist from such conduct, and like or related conduct, and to take affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Respondent suggested at the hearing that West is not entitled to a reinstatement remedy because she allegedly revealed to one of Respondent's competitors, Bankers Search Company, a form used by Respondent to set forth the results of a title search and to bill the individual who requested the search, and Bankers Search thereafter copied and used the form. An earlier version of Respondent's form was developed in 1968 by Jack Hornstein's father (who started the business) and Jack Hornstein, and the form has since been updated every 4 or 5 years. The exact form used by Respondent when West was discharged has been used since 1983. On a date not clear in the record, but no later than 19 March 1987 and inferentially about early March 1987, Respondent learned that Bankers Search was using a form that was virtually identical, except that the name and address of Bankers Search appeared in place of the name and address of Respondent.[54] From a comparison of the two forms, I infer that the Bankers Search form was copied from Respondent's form. Thousands of filled-out copies of the first page of Respondent's form have been received by other companies and individuals. Further, although copies of the third page are not normally distributed by Respondent to persons unconnected with Respondent, filled-in copies of that page are sent to Respondent's bookkeeping department, which consists of three or four people. In addition, the record suggests that many of the entries on that page are made by employees of Respondent who receive orders for title searches.[55] West testified that she had no association whatever with Bankers Search before she started working for it on 4 May 1987, several weeks after Respondent learned about Bankers Search's use of the copied form, which is not copyrighted. I find that West was not Bankers Search's source of the form. Accordingly, I need not and do not consider whether any such action by West would affect her right to reinstatement, particularly if her alleged disclosure of the form had been made in connection with her search for a job after her discriminatory discharge and/or after such discharge. Cf. Vought Corp., 273 NLRB 1290, 1295 (1984), enfd. 788 F.2d 1378 (8th Cir. 1986), and cases cited.

[54] This finding is based on a comparison between a two-page photocopy of the Bankers Search form (R. Exh. 5) and the first and third pages of Respondent's original form (R. Exh. 4). The photocopy of the Banker's Search form contains nothing corresponding to the second page of Respondent's form, which page is printed on the reverse of the first page.

Accordingly, Respondent will be required to offer to reinstate West to the job that she held in Respondent's Philadelphia office, without prejudice to her seniority and other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and to make her whole for any loss of pay and benefits she may have suffered on and after 17 February 1987. All payments are to be made with interest as computed in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987). Backpay is to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950).

When I asked the General Counsel at the hearing whether she sought a reinstatement remedy for West if her transfer was unlawful but her discharge was not, the General Counsel replied no. Although I have found no cases directly in point, the authorities preponderantly suggest that in the absence of unfair prejudice to Respondent, I am not bound by the General Counsel's position regarding remedy.[56] Moreover, Board precedent indicates that such findings would entitle West, at the very least, to an offer of reinstatement to her old job in Philadelphia and, in addition to backpay between her transfer and her discharge, to a make-whole order effective 5 days after Respondent's receipt of this decision. Anderson-Rooney Operating Co., 134 NLRB 1480, 1481–1482 (1961). Indeed, it is at least arguable that she would be entitled to backpay throughout the entire period following her transfer. See Schott's Bakery, 164 NLRB 332, and cases cited in fn. 1 of the Board's decision (1967); John Kinkel & Son, 157 NLRB 744, 745–746 (1966); Super Tire Stores, 236 NLRB 877 (1978). In this connection, I note (1) that because Respondent for antiunion reasons ordered West to transfer to Norristown in the expectation that the increased commuting distance would cause her to resign, if for that reason she had resigned instead of transferring she would likely have been entitled to an order of reinstatement and uninterrupted backpay on the ground that she had been constructively discharged; (2) that particularly because her transfer letter had stated that her wages would not be changed, she would likely have been entitled to such a remedial order for such reasons if she had resigned when and because on 18 February Respondent imposed on her, for antiunion reasons, the new employment condition that she would thereafter be docked for tardiness, which her daughter's chronic illness made almost unavoidable from time to time and which was rendered more likely by the additional railroad commutation trip that Respondent had erroneously believed would in itself be sufficient to bring about her resignation; (3) that because she had not performed a "full delivery route" (or, indeed, made any deliveries) to customers since her phlebitis operation, and because (as Hornstein knew) since that operation she had been reluctant to take long walks, she would likely have been entitled to an order of reinstatement to the Philadelphia office and to backpay if, instead of telling her that her Norristown "responsibilities" would be "similar," her transfer letter had stated (as did Barone after West accepted the transfer) that at Norristown she would be required to make a "delivery route" and, in consequence, she had resigned, rather than accept her discriminatory transfer; (4) because she had not been required to make any deliveries in Philadelphia for the last 10 months she worked there, she might have been entitled to such a remedial order if her transfer letter had clearly stated that she would be expected to make occasional round trips of from two to four blocks on foot to carry documents to customers and, for that reason, she had resigned rather than accept her discriminatory transfer; (5) that when orally ordering her to learn the delivery route in Norristown, Respondent failed to explain (as it almost certainly would have done had Respondent honestly wanted her to stay on the job and perform such duties in Norristown) that deliveries in Norristown merely involved taking documents about twice a week to a customer a block or two away; and (6) that her action in from time to time performing for Bankers Search, where she worked after her discharge by Respondent, the function of taking documents to city hall about a block away indicates that she would likely have been willing to perform such functions in Norristown if their limited nature had been explained to her. Cf. BMD Sportswear Corp., 283 NLRB 142, 159–160 (1987); Superior Forwarding Co., 282 NLRB 806 (1987); Reno Hilton, 282 NLRB 819, 834–837 (1987). However, in my view of my finding that both West's transfer and her discharge were unlawfully motivated, I need not and do not consider whether such a finding as to her transfer only would call for more than an Anderson-Rooney order.

In the absence of any specific showing need for a visitatorial clause in the circumstances of this case, the General Counsel's request for such a clause is denied. Cherokee Marine Terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988).

[55] This third page is preceded by carbon paper and, except for a blank specifying "Price," is identical to the top third of the first page. The format of the form contemplates that except for the "Price" entry, the third page is filled out (through the presence of carbon paper) simultaneously with the upper portion of the first page. Bankers Search used the third page as a bill. It is unclear whether Respondent followed the same practice.

[56] Dean General Contractors, 285 NLRB 573 fn. 5 (1987); Nabco Corp., 266 NLRB 687, fn. 1 (1983); R. J. E. Leasing Corp., 262 NLRB 373 fn. 1 of August 1982 order. Cf. Gabel Tank Co., 166 NLRB 902 fn. 1 of Board's decision (1967).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[57]

ORDER

The Respondent, Security Search and Abstract Company of Philadelphia, Inc., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening, because of employees' union activities, to dock such employees' wages if they are late; threatening to transfer employees because of their union activities; telling employees that they cannot use company telephones because of their union activities; threatening to discharge employees if they continue their union activities; threatening to reduce employees' wages if a union comes in; and interrogating employees about a union in a manner constituting interference, restraint, or coercion.

(b) Discouraging membership in Teamsters Union Local No. 115 a/w International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO, or any labor organization, by transfering employees, changing employees' terms and conditions of employment, discharging employees, or otherwise discriminating in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Peggy West reinstatement to the job which she held on and before 13 February 1987 in Respondent's office in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania or, if such a job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job, without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed.

(b) Make Peggy West whole for any loss of earnings or other benefits suffered as a result of the unlawful discrimination against her, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(c) Remove from its files any reference to Peggy West's unlawful transfer and discharge, and notify her in writing that this has been done and that such personnel action will not be held against her in any way.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at Respondent's office in Philadelphia and Norristown, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[58] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that paragraphs 6(f) and (g) of the amended complaint be dismissed.

[57] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[58] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Franzia Brothers Winery and Winery, Distillery & Allied Workers Union, Local No. 186, Distillery, Rectifying, Wine & Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO. Cases 32–CA–8794, 32–CA–8795, and 32–CA–8798

August 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On March 1, 1988, Administrative Law Judge David G. Heilbrun issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Franzia Brothers Winery, Ripon, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] Even if the Respondent had established that it had an honest belief that the discriminatees had engaged in picket line misconduct, we agree with the judge that the General Counsel proved that the alleged misconduct did not occur, i.e., that the credited evidence showed that employee Beckerdite was not involved in the incidents relied on by the Respondent and that the incidents involving Treadway and Whitley on which the Respondent relies were purely defensive reactions to actions by others and did not rise to the level of misconduct. Accordingly, on that basis, we adopt the judge's decision that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act when it suspended, discharged, and refused to reinstate Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway because of their strike-related activities.

David Dominguez, for the General Counsel.
Richard H. Harding and Mark E. Robson (Littler, Mendelson, Fastiff & Tichy), of Walnut Creek, California, for the Respondent.
Victor C. Thuesen, of Petaluma, California, for the Union.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

DAVID G. HEILBRUN, Administrative Law Judge. These cases were tried in hearings held at Ceres, California, on 10 and 11 September 1987 and at Modesto, California, on 15 October 1987. The charges were filed by Winery, Distillery & Allied Workers Union, Local No. 186, Distillery, Rectifying, Wine & Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO (the Union), 18 March 1987, and the consolidated complaint was issued 27 May 1987. The primary issues are whether Franzia Brothers Winery (Respondent) suspended and then discharged Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway because of claimed strike misconduct, which the General Counsel asserts was not in fact engaged in or, alternately, not sufficiently serious to warrant their termination or loss of striker reinstatement rights, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of witnesses, and after consideration of briefs filed by General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a California corporation with an office and place of business in Ripon, California, where it is engaged in the production and nonretail distribution of wine and related products. During a recent past representative 12-month period, Respondent sold and shipped goods valued in excess of $50,000 in the course and conduct of its business operations directly to customers located outside California. On these admitted facts I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act and, as is also admitted, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondent's facility is situated along the southern side of a mainly rural stretch on east-west running State Highway 120. A continuous flow of general traffic uses this two-lane road, and Respondent's prominent activities for the area results in considerable vehicular turning into its premises by employees and those arriving on business, including truckers. A guardhouse is located somewhat down the entering driveway. At the associated exit point, a stop sign controls departing traffic before any right or left turning onto Highway 120.

As a full-scale producer of wine and related products, Respondent is a member of the Winery Employers Association (WEA), an organization existing for at least collective-bargaining purposes. Pursuant to this membership the WEA, by its designated spokesperson, acted as sole and exclusive bargaining representative for Respondent. In summer 1986, contract renewal negotiations took place between the WEA and the Union. When an existing contract expired on 31 July 1986, negotiations nevertheless continued between the parties.[1]

As a phase of this bargaining process the union-represented employees of Respondent commenced a strike on [1] All dates and named months are in 1986, unless otherwise indicated.

Tuesday, 26 August. This was a critical seasonal point in Respondent's operations, for the annual "crush" of grapes was underway and major adversity could result from perishable losses. At commencement of the strike there were approximately 250 employees in the plant bargaining unit, and practically all of them went on strike. Respondent also employed approximately 125 salaried employees in supervision, marketing, and clerical functions.

At its inception the strike resulted in the massing of pickets at Respondent's main gate and auxiliary entrance. On Sunday, 31 August, the Union organized its picketing with strike leaders and shift captains. A strike leader's function was to prepare picketing schedules and maintain general communication with those on strike. The shift captain was to oversee a particular 4-hour timespan by maintaining appropriate control over strike activities and be chiefly representative of the Union for that shift.

Respondent reacted to the strike by an immediate campaign of hiring replacement employees, and through their use, coupled with long hours worked by salaried employees, continued to operate. Additionally, it increased the number of security personnel provided by American Protective Services (APS), and generally required closer monitoring of the premises with more detailed reporting of happenings associated with the strike. Respondent's executive and management hierarchy during this period was headed by Arthur Ciocca, its San Francisco-based president who also heads a separate entity called The Wine Group, Ltd. Day-to-day operations at the winery were run by Senior Vice President Lynn Bates, while Personnel Manager Kikuye Joyce Stonehocker fulfilled various employee relations functions including coordination of on-premises food service and dealings with APS. Initially the increased security function called for preparation of daily activity reports by the officers; however, these reports proved too detailed for Respondent's later objective of securing injunctive relief from a state court with respect to occurrences of the picketing. In this vein, a temporary restraining order (TRO) was secured on 9 September, and later that month a superseding preliminary injunction. To support such action by the court, extracts were made from earlier daily activity reports as separately written special incident reports, in which the complained of strike activities were described. These special incident reports thus evolved as the preferred form of recording by APS personnel for noteworthy occurrences. Respondent's chief liaison with APS was to its Modesto-based assistant branch manager, Donald Ferris. In turn, the service at this client's premises was overseen by Security Captain Cruz plus lieutenants John Dawson and Victor Munoz.

The Union ended its strike effective 3 October. Respondent promptly returned its striking employees to work to the extent needed, dismissing temporary replacements in the process. An exception applied to several persons concerning whom suspensions were issued while individual consideration was given to documented reports of their activities as chronically and specifically manifested during the strike. In consequence of this, four persons were denied employment on the assigned basis of strike misconduct. Three of the persons in this group are those to which this proceeding pertains. In each instance, they received a letter dated 8 October from Bates in which the specific accusations found sufficient by Respondent for such action were listed.

B. Basis of Analysis

1. Robert Whitley

The described letter to this individual enumerated the following bases for a denial of reinstatement because of claimed "strike misconduct":

> (1) [M]ultiple instances of blocking traffic crossing the picket line and dangerously blocking the view of drivers of vehicles crossing the picket line;
> (2) brandishing your picket sign in a threatening and dangerous manner and intentionally attempting to strike a security guard with the picket sign;
> (3) wielding your picket sign in a dangerous manner and threatening to strike individuals with it; and > (4) generally harassing, verbally abusing, and/or threatening the well-being of individuals crossing the picket line.

In Whitley's case the evidence principally concerned an episode on 25 September when a sheriff's department officer was called to the scene because of claimedly unauthorized movement by picketers contravening terms of the injunctive order. Discussion ensued between this officer and Whitley, with at least picketer Jean Eisenga participating marginally. As this transpired, security guard Mario Brock, acting at his lieutenant's direction, maneuvered with a video camera to obtain a visual record of Whitley engaging in this discussion. Whitley reacted in equal determination not to be pictured by continuous turning away, ducking, and covering his face with his picket sign. This effort and countereffort lasted nearly 10 minutes, with Whitley becoming increasingly vocal by calling out profane protests about the attempt to clearly show him on film. In the course of Brock's objective, his camera came to within a foot of Whitley's face. The culmination was a flurrying movement by Whitley in which his picket sign was poked toward and up to the lens of Brock's camcorder.

Whitley testified that he had personal objection to the prospect of being so pictured, and felt "intimidated" for an extended time by Brock's relentless pursuit. He denied striking Brock or his camera, and denied any aggressive movements of his picket sign. Whitley testified that his conduct was strictly that of avoidance, and that he coupled the protests voiced to Brock with a running entreaty that the sheriff's department officer with whom he was speaking use police authority to stop the camera. Whitley is corroborated by Eisenga, who added that APS personnel had never before used a camera by approaching so closely to an individual being photographed. Witnesses Darla Bell and Fatima Faria also credibly described that picture-taking had always previously been done from a distance of approximately 20 feet.

Brock testified that his purposes were to fulfill an order that Whitley's face be shown while in conversation with a law enforcement officer at a point in time subsequent to issuance of the injunctive relief. In this sense he tried only to find a moment and an angle that would record Whitley's presence. Brock believed that Whitley may have hit the video camera at a point late in the episode, when he suddenly and angrily moved toward Brock while also swinging the picket sign forward. Former APS security guard Louisa Dorton testified to being present and seeing this incident culminate by Whitley swinging his picket sign at Brock.

On a separate general accusation against Whitley, Respondent's eyewitness is Dorton. In her assignment to Respondent's facility during the strike, Dorton had been primarily a recorder of events and activities. In this capacity she had written a special incident report dated 15 September, reporting that Whitley and another male picket had blocked incoming traffic and also blocked the view available to drivers by the positioning of picket signs and standing overly close to the vehicle. Dorton also elaborated on a group of photographs introduced into evidence by Respondent, by testifying that they depicted the different moments that she personally recalled as amounting to the reported blockings in which Whitley participated.

Whitley denied engaging in the "dangerous act" of blocking the vision of drivers attempting to leave the facility. He asserted that to the contrary, and as an assistant strike captain aware of the state court order, his regular picketing activity was proper at all times.

Frank Isaia picketed on the same shift with Whitley. He testified to being in close proximity with Whitley 99 percent of the time and to never seeing him block traffic or attempt to obstruct the view of drivers.

2. Richelle Beckerdite

Beckerdite was a striker who served simultaneously as a strike leader and shift captain when picketing from 4 to 8 p.m. The letter to her enumerated the following bases for a denial of reinstatement because of claimed "strike misconduct":

> (1) Multiple instances of blocking vehicles crossing the picket line and/or dangerously blocking the view or drivers of vehicles crossing the picket line;
> (2) multiple instances of spitting on vehicles crossing the picket line;
> (3) harassing, verbally abusing and/or threatening the well-being of individuals crossing the picket line, including the use of inflammatory racial epithets and threats to the life of individuals crossing the picket line and their families.

In support of its decision here Respondent advanced the testimony of various witnesses, security service reports regarding Beckerdite, and a transcript of testimony by now-unavailable APS guard Homer Cleveland. David Wittig testified that he was employed as a security officer for a month's stint at Respondent's facility while the strike was in progress. He mainly worked a 12-hour shift of 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. He recalled Beckerdite from his first day on the job as most vocal among the numerous picketers. Wittig acquired a familiarity with Beckerdite based on her name being told to him by another guard as he checked in for his first night of work. Wittig testified that from his guard station "quite a distance" from the picketers he could frequently hear Beckerdite yelling profanity at incoming replacement workers and loudly claiming to know the whereabouts of their families. Wittig adopted the contents of daily activity reports dated 31 August and 2 September as his own recollection of Beckerdite's loud vituperation, veiled threats, and sarcastic yelling that arriving "wetback bitches [have] fun filling out those wetbacks applications." Wittig further adopted the recordings of Beckerdite having called persons crossing the picket line "motherfucker" and "fucking assholes [who were] going to get your ass kicked [after having] your nose punched," as well as scathingly asking whether any such "scabies [could] read or speak English [or] like your picture taken." A separate report by APS guard Glenda Gray recited that on 26 August Beckerdite had spat on cars entering the plant. The transcript of Cleveland's testimony at an unemployment insurance appeals hearing showed that Beckerdite had repeatedly blocked the view of a driver at the picket line on 26 August. This testimony was consistent with security reports written by Cleveland on or concerning Beckerdite's conduct on 26 August.

Gwendolyn Lovett testified that she is an experienced employee of APS, and was assigned to Respondent's facility during the strike. Her duty station was the main gate for routine logging and to record unusual events on a shift from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. Familiarity with Beckerdite originated on her first day of service at this client when "everybody was telling me about her" concerning "how she talked and everything." Lovett adopted the contents of several security service reports regarding Beckerdite, as what she remembered happening by directed statements of Beckerdite to people in the plant or crossing the picket line and occasionally amplified with a bullhorn. These statements included what was adopted by Wittig, as well as numerous obscene insults.

Stephen Robert Corbett testified that he had 2 months of employment with Respondent in the summer of 1986, beginning several weeks before the strike started. As a probationary employee he elected not to join the strike, and remained in his position of wine cellar laborer on what became a 7-day-per-week graveyard shift during the strike. Corbett's practice was to arrive for work around 11:30 p.m. He is a large man, 6 feet in height and weighing 265 pounds at the time. Corbett testified that on about 20 occasions as he would drive through the picket line arriving for work, Beckerdite yelled "abusive" obscenities at him and continued her loud "shouting" or bullhorn-amplified comments as he reached his parking place and proceeded toward the winery building at a point about 1500 feet from where Beckerdite stood with the group of approximately 25 night picketers. The specifics of his recollection was that her "repertoire" of statements included calling him a "fat assed redneck motherfucker," that "your mother and wife suck donkey dicks," and that "I'm going to stick you" and "my brother is going to be out fucking your wife tonight while you're in there working so how do you like that? . . .

we know where you live and we will visit your wife." Corbett's familiarity with Beckerdite arose on the first night of crossing the picket line when he asked his supervisor about "the crazy lady with the big mouth" and was told that this person with long, dark hair was Beckerdite.

Diana Banks testified that she began a marketing position with Respondent on 28 August and, on leaving work at approximately 4:30 p.m. on her first or second day, experienced loud statements made to her by Beckerdite as her car reached the exiting point to the highway. Banks recalled Beckerdite's unsolicited approach to her closed driver's side window, and the shouted insults of "fucking bitch." "cunt [who] liked to fuck dogs," and "low life" whose license plate number they knew and from which Beckerdite "was going to come get me." Banks testified that Beckerdite's outburst lasted 10 or 15 seconds with some of the phrasing repeated, and occurred in the context of 10 to 15 picketers present plus a bearded man also shouting obscenities from the other side of her car. Banks' familiarity with Beckerdite is based on her being "pointed out" by a coworker.

Beckerdite herself denied ever before seeing Corbett or Banks, plus expressly and relatedly denying that she made the statements attributed to her by any of the witnesses for Respondent. Additionally, she denied blocking the view of drivers spitting on cars, or use of language attributed to her at other times in the security service recordings accumulated by Respondent. Contrarily, she testified to being a calming influence on strike activities, intending only to allow permissible picketing conduct on her shift or when present. Regarding attributed epithets recorded as occurring on 4 September at approximately 10:30 p.m. midnight, Beckerdite testified that she was simply not present at such a date and time because of late-night care responsibility for her school-age daughter. On another reported occasion of verbal threats occurring on 31 August at 11:35 p.m., Beckerdite testified that a foot injury of the day before had forced her to go home early in the evening and turn over her assigned picket shift to another striker.

Beckerdite is corroborated in her denial of the charged misconduct by several witnesses. First among these was Sue Michelucci, an 8-year employee who served the strike as a shift captain on alternating nights as this structured scheduling began on 31 August. Michelucci denied that observing that Beckerdite blocked the view of drivers, threatened any person's physical safety, or made racial slurs. Concerning the evening of 31 August Michelucci asserted that Beckerdite simply was not there about the reported 11:35 p.m. time, because she herself had covered as a replacement. Picketer Vera Sumpter also denied ever seeing conduct by Beckerdite of the type for which she was accused, while Theresa Burleson corroborated the unlikelihood that Beckerdite was presently late in the evening of 31 August.

Peter White lives with Beckerdite as her boyfriend. He was also a striking employee of Respondent who briefly took reinstatement when the strike ended. During the strike he functioned as an assistant strike leader and shift captain for the 8 p.m. to midnight assignment. White described this arrangement as one permitting he and Beckerdite to share the total after-school and evening care of her daughter. White testified that after the Union's meeting of 31 August he and Beckerdite stopped briefly at the picket line, but because of her foot injury she left by 7 p.m. at the latest. He also testified concerning Respondent's recorded episode of 4 September, asserting that Beckerdite could not have been present at the stated 10:30 p.m. time because the school year had begun and under their sharing arrangement covering the consecutive picket shifts Beckerdite would not have remained in the vicinity past 9 p.m. White added general denials of the accusations that Beckerdite had made racial slurs: threatened physical harm to anyone's person, wife or family; blocked incoming or outgoing vehicles; or ever obstructed the view of a driver in passage.

3. Donald Treadway

The letter to this individual enumerated the following bases for a denial of reinstatement because of claimed "strike misconduct":

(1) unprovoked physical assault on an individual crossing the picket line about September 2, 1986;
(2) generally harassing, verbally abusing, and/or threatening the well-being of indivuduals crossing the picket line;
(3) photographing and listing the vehicle license numbers of individuals crossing the picket line and threatening their well-being.

Here Respondent's evidence is principally an eyewitness to the momentary episode of 2 September when an altercation developed suddenly as replacement employee Arthur Maldonado arrived for work. According to Wittig he observed the incoming employee unexplainably stop just on the plant driveway and as a beer can lay behind his car. Wittig testified that as he watched from about 20 feet away the driver opened his car door to alight. He recalled strikers congregating around the vehicle, and that as the driver stepped out Treadway forcefully punched his face without provocation. Wittig testified that this caused the person to sit back down in the car holding his face as another guard quickly moved in telling him to drive on inside. After momentary recovery from the punch, Maldonado did so.

Treadway's version is that the arriving individual had turned recklessly off the road in endangerment of pickets. Treadway shouted to "slow your goddamned ass down," and with this the car abruptly stopped and its very large, glasses-wearing driver menacingly emerged. Treadway described the situation as a 2-second-long episode in which he had no retreat movement because of picketers clustered around him, and his reflex action was to hit the person stopping his forward momentum. An APS lieutenant appeared immediately to take a picture of the scene, and when he departed Treadway asserted that he was consolingly congratulated by other security officers, including a guard believed to be Jake Lewallen. Treadway added that during his 14-year employment as a truckdriver with Respondent he had never before been involved in a physical altercation.

Striker Eva Sousa testified that she was present during this incident. She recalled a car's sudden stop after it had pulled into the driveway overly fast from the highway. Sousa testified that the driver belligerently emerged saying "who is the motherfucker that hit my car?" as he lunged toward Treadway. She saw Treadway hit the person and guards instantly converged to hurry him back into his car and have him drive on inside. Her view of the episode had been from about 10 feet away on the passenger's side of the car in question.

Michelucci also testified as an eyewitness to the Treadway incident. She heard the described exchange of yells between Treadway and the driver, then saw the latter jump out of the stopped car and go "right towards Don." She recalled Treadway being pinned where he was, and that he hit the "huge" adversary leading to the arrival of guards including Lewallen.

C. Trial Methodology, Issues, and Contentions

The parties stipulated that for purposes of this litigation the General Counsel possessed a prima facie case in terms of showing an 8(a) (3) violation concerning each of the persons involved. On that basis the opening phase of hearing was conducted by Respondent, as it thus first presented evidence with regard to circumstances of each discharge and the manner of reaching managerial decision for each case.

This approach recognized and utilized Board law on the subject. In Rubin Bros. Footwear, 99 NLRB 610 (1951), the nature of each party's burden of proof is delineated. When the instance, as here, is denial of reinstatement because of claimed strike misconduct, an employer burden of going forward with the evidence is then created. The crux of this burden is to demonstrate an honest belief that the individual had engaged in particular strike misconduct. This employer burden of persuasion about an honest belief on the subject does not extend to proving that those discharged did in fact engage in the misconduct. Relatedly, the establishment of this honest belief shifts the burden of persuasion back to the General Counsel to prove that the striker involved did not in fact engage in the claimed misconduct. Should evidence under this shifted burden be lacking on the issue, the matter is resolved favorably to the employer in reflection of the General Counsel's obligation to carry the ultimate burden of proving that unlawful discrimination has occurred. See Schreiber Mfg. v. NLRB, 725 F.2d 413 (6th Cir. 1984).

The essence of meeting an employer honest belief burden is found in the following passage from General Telephone Co. of Michigan, 251 NLRB 737, 739 (1980):

> [T]he burden of establishing an "honest belief" of misconduct requires more than the employer's mere assertion that an "honest belief" of such misconduct was the motivationg force behind the meting out of discipline. Meeting the burden also requires more than a general statement about the guidelines used in establishing the alleged "honest belief." Rather, it requires some specificity in the record, linking particular employees to particular allegations of misconduct.

From this settled structuring, the issues of the case evolve as (1) whether Respondent has demonstrated its honest belief in the strike misconduct of each dischargee, and (2) if so, whether the General Counsel has effectively proven that such repugnant conduct did not in fact occur.

Respondent contends that the numerous written reports of misconduct, input of eyewitnesses, the viewable videotape,[2] and its orderly deferral of decision until multiple executive or advisory review was completed, leads to the "inescapable conclusion" that a proper harboring of honest belief in each instance has been shown. Relatedly, Respondent contends that the General Counsel has failed to negate the fact of picket line misconduct by each of the three individuals.

The General Counsel contends that Whitley has been easily cleared of all general accusations, and that concerning the videotaped incident he was provoked into animated conduct, which was excusable by its spontaneity and essential lack of aggressiveness. Regarding Beckerdite, the General Counsel contends that any verbalisms that she in fact uttered were not of a nature as reasonably would tend to coerce or restrain the Section 7 rights of other employees. In Treadway's case the General Counsel contends that classic self-defense behavior is all that was involved, and that Respondent should suffer an adverse inference on this issue by failure to call as its witness the apparently available person that was struck.

D. Credibility

Resolution of the sharp conflicts in testimony is essential to reaching decision here. Demeanor factors are highly significant in this process, while inferable probabilities become a secondary part of the reasoning. I generally discredit Respondent's witnesses Wittig, Lovett, Dorton, Brock, Corbett, and Banks. Wittig was inexperienced in the security process into which he entered, and I did not find his description of the Treadway incident to be candid, convincing, or free of doubt on his own part. Lovett and Dorton each manifested with a decided uncertainty to their testimony, and an inclination to assume more than pure observation could establish. Lovett, in particular, was unconvincing on standard demeanor grounds of hesitancy and seeming lack of an accurate memory. Brock exhibited a degree of defensiveness regarding his role in the Whitley incident, and tellingly shifted the meaning and emphasis of his testimony as it unfolded during the respective phases of examination. With respect to Corbett and Banks, their identification of Beckerdite as utterer of extreme vituperation was based on insufficient personal knowledge.[3] Undoubtedly each of these witnesses experienced namecalling of the nastiest variety; however, I am unpersuaded that Beckerdite was the source. Given the unruly context of what their employment situation suddenly became, the hectic clustering of strange and hostile persons at the picket line point, and the limited visibility associated with nighttime incidents, I am convinced that both Corbett and Banks are mistaken in their testimony against Beckerdite. On pure demeanor grounds I am skeptical of Corbett's offerings because of the fanciful manner in which presented and a palpable eagerness to claim more than seems likely. In Banks' case, the resolution is more difficult because of her candid-appearing manner. Nevertheless, I believe she has yielded to suggestibility inherent in this situation, and do not accept the ultimate truth of her testimony.

[2] Consideration of what can be seen on videotaped film has previously been approved in the evaluation of claimed strike misconduct. Clayton v. Gold Bond Bldg. Products, 2 IER Cases 1171 (USDC, E.D. Mich. 1987).

[3] The General Counsel renews a motion to strike the testimony of both Corbett and Banks. Contrary to arguments made, I do not find the order in which they were called as irregular. Respondent had no obiligation to advance all evidence supportive of its claimed honest belief in strike misconduct, and could properly instead use these witnesses for rebuttal-type purposes. See Rubin Bros., supra at 611.

The credibility resolution above dovetails with my impressions of witnesses for the General Counsel. The dischargees each impressed me as being forthright, alertly correct in their assertions, and honest intentioned. I also accept the integrity of testimony by Michelucci, White,[4] Isaia, and Bell, as most persuasive from among the numerous witnesses called by the General Counsel for the object of defeating Respondent's defense.

E. Analysis

There is established doctrine for evaluating the conduct of picket line activity, apart from the technical principles under which cases such as this are litigated. Plainly the strike scene at its outset involved unregulated behavior by the large group of persons that appeared at the facility during the immediate days following inception. Typical techniques of a spirited or inspirational nature were present, such as a daily flag display, use of insignia by pickets, and concentrated efforts to influence arriving persons that the strike's objectives should be preferred. Nor was it a quiet scene, as Beckerdite herself recalled the use of bullhorns and the calling out of obscenities by strikers. Sufficient action and stimulus was generated that countering behavior was also caused, as when Maldonado essentially screeched his car to a stop to alight angrily, and as with Corbett's admission of probably having answered back at his verbal tormenter to "fuck yourself or something."

Additionally, Respondent has presented a detailed reconstruction of the plantsite, the clearance at the highway's edge, and planes of view as drivers might experience them in difficult and fast-changing circumstances of the picketers' conduct. But photographs, stipulations, and episodal description are only a context for fundamental questions of whether particular strikers engaged sufficiently or at all in impermissible conduct. Ultimately the information sources must all coalesce in terms of an employer's honest belief of misconduct as this leads to the issue of whether in fact it occurred.

Regarding the sounds of purposeful strike action, the Supreme Court has noted that Federal labor policy generally contemplates "freewheeling use of the . . . spoken word," "uninhibited, robust, and wide-open debate in labor disputes," and use of "intemperate, abusive or insulting language." Letter Carriers v. Austin, 418 U.S. 264, 272, 273, 283 (1974). This reflects the Board's own long-held recognition that a reality of labor relations is its exchanges by heated and bitter language. While not condoning such behavior the Board once characterized this reality in the following passage:

> [I]t is common knowledge that in a strike where vital economic issues are at stake, striking employees resent those who cross the picket line and will express their sentiments in language not altogether suited to the pleasantries of the drawing room or even to courtesies of parliamentary disputation. Thus, we believe that to suggest that employees in the heat of picket-line animosity must trim their expression of disapproval . . . would be to ignore the industrial realities of speech in a work day world. . . . [Longview Furniture Co., 100 NLRB 301, 304 (1952).]

Clear Pine Mouldings, 268 NLRB 1044 (1984), refined the doctrine by specifically holding that utterances could lead to legitimate denial of reinstatement to strikers whose strike-related misconduct under the circumstances reasonably tended to coerce or intimidate other persons in the exercise of their rights protected under Section 7 of the Act.[5] A concurring opinion in Clear Pine Mouldings urged that the McQuaide test be applied with awareness of the often "tense, angry, and hostile confrontations" of a picket line in which "emotions run high and threats are hurled that connot reasonably be interpreted as auguries of violence." In a comparable vein it has been noted that a truly "serious threat" is one that "may draw its credibility from the surrounding circumstances and not from the physical gestures of the speaker." Associated Grocers of New England v. NLRB, 562 F.2d 1333, 1336 (1st Cir. 1977).

I hold that the General Counsel prevails on both issues presented here. The accumulation of materials by Respondent and an initial consideration they were given does not rise to the level of an honest belief in the misconduct of each discharged person. There was no attention given to the fact that Beckerdite was generally cooperative and dutiful in response to particular requests of security personnel that some untoward situation be rectified, nor was her version of the facts solicited. Further, the decision-making process is itself suspect, because even though Stonehocker described its sequence, Ciocca contradicted her concerning whether he had been instrumental as final authority on the cases. As with Beckerdite neither Whitley nor Treadway was sought out for a hearing of his version on the unique episodes involved. The security apparatus in place for the strike was itself prone to recordmaking for this sake alone, and I note here that an APS lieutenant, as Treadway credibly recalled, photographed "the vineyard" long after dynamics of his Maldonado altercation had ceased. Nor is there a "linking" of Beckerdite to the more ominous utterances

[4] In White's case I have specifically weighed his personal allegiance to Beckerdite, and puzzling minor vacillations in how he recounted the facts. Overall, however, I am influenced to fully credit his testimony.

[5] This holding took its rationale from NLRB v. McQuaide, Inc., 552 F.2d 519 (3d Cir. 1977), denying enf. in part 220 NLRB 593 (1975).

heard, or a showing that she, in "particular," was the actual speaker rather than a known personality of prominent influence on, and in connection with, the picket line. I believe the evidence showed that Respondent distanced itself from the security function, and artificially relied on drily formalistic documentation in lieu of a sincere wish to obtain the truth. Cf. Tube Craft, Inc., 287 NLRB 491 (1987).

Even should an honest belief have been present, I relatedly hold that the strike misconduct of these accusations did not in fact occur in the three instances. Whitley's case is one in which the subjective experience of having watched the videotape is part of the factfinding process. I can only make an impartial characterization of it, and in doing so describe seeing an increasingly exasperated individual bobbing, twisting, glaring, and shielding himself relative to the picture-taking effort until that one final movement which was more of defiance than of assault. What Respondent has taken from this film excerpt and its other sources of information does not amount to a "brandishing" or "dangerous [wielding]" of a picket sign, and given the nature and time length of what Whitley experienced it would seem his behavior was but a normal reflex following excitable buildup of this type. Cf. Olympic Limousine Service, 278 NLRB 932, 943 (1986), and cases cited. In making argument on Whitley's case, Respondent has misplaced a reliance on Carpenters (Reeves, Inc.), 281 NLRB 493 (1986), for this decision applied Section 8(b) of the Act to conduct on behalf of a picketing labor organization and does not address issues of individual strike eligibility for reinstatement. Further, the holdings in Preterm, Inc., 273 NLRB 683 (1984), enfd. in relevant part 784 F.2d 426 (1st Cir. 1986), are unavailing because there are unprovoked grabbing and shaking of a nonstriking employee was "clearly" found to have been "intimidating and coercive conduct." The General Counsel has established that other enumerated accusations against Whitley did not actually occur.

In Beckerdite's case I find from her testimony, and that of credible corroborating witnesses, that she neither blocked the view of drivers of vehicles nor spat on these vehicles. Regarding the more vivid and critical accusation of claimed verbal abuse, I find it was not Beckerdite who so behaved and those persons claiming otherwise do so in error. Cf. Gem Urethane Corp., 284 NLRB 1349 (1987). I recognize that credited testimony toward the unlikelihood of Beckerdite being present at the time of reported incidents on 31 August and 4 September is not fully dispositive. As strike leader she had random comings and goings, consistent even with White's testimony that she might "pop in" at shift change. However, Respondent's own evidence shows that simultaneous yelling by a "male striker" overlapped Beckerdite's own reported words on 31 August at 11:29 p.m. (R. Exh. 19). Cf. MGM Grand Hotel, 275 NLRB 1015 (1985).

Regarding Treadway, I credit the composite of evidence showing his striking of Maldonado was a standard act of self-defense, and find no basis for discipline against him. It cannot be said he engaged in strike misconduct when his only notable act was to forcefully repel an apparent attacker. As with Whitley, the other enumerated accusations against Treadway were proven by the General Counsel to be hollow.

On a collateral point the Union, exercising its full standing as Charging Party, made a record on the matter of whether Ciocca had assured assembled employees there would be no strike-misconduct discharges as he met with them in the immediate euphoria when the strike ended on 3 October. This meeting, and a larger one that followed directly, involved Ciocca taking the opportunity to communicate directly to Respondent's employees that he was generally gratified to learn the strike was over. An activating factor here was then-pending advice by the WEA that striking employees of member employers would be permanently replaced on or after 6 October, a tactic that had been withheld up to that point. However, at Respondent's facility a more pointed concern was with rumors that the employer harbored plans to penalize certain individuals for their strike activities.

On this subsidiary issue I credit Sousa, Michelucci, and Bell, who each testified persuasively that Ciocca was asked if discharges were contemplated and he answered in the negative. Ciocca vigorously denied that the subject arose; however, I am satisfied from the demeanor of his testimony that he was in error. It is also highly likely that the subject would have been raised, because Treadway in particular had let it be generally known how he was apprehensive that the earlier Maldonado incident would haunt him. Additionally, Respondent had itself raised this specter in a general letter to striking employees dated 12 September.

I consider the issue academic, however, because there is an insufficient link to what Ciocca might have said under these circumstances and the methodically structured manner in which Stonehocker marshaled, synthesized, and routed those materials seeming to be significant in determining the several terminations. Based on rulings made in the course of trial the Union is not able to raise this matter as a theory of condonation, but instead advances it only for makeweight purposes. Accordingly, I do not rely on this aspect of the record as a reason supportive of the violations found present.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Franzia Brothers Winery is an employer engaged in commerce within the meeting of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Winery, Distillery & Allied Workers Union, Local No. 186, Distillery, Rectifying, Wine & Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By suspending, discharging, and denying reinstatement to Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway because of their strike-related activities, Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order it to cease and desist therefrom and take affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully suspended, discharged, and refused to reinstate Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway to employment at all times from and after 4 October, I shall recommend that Respondent be required to make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. Backpay shall be computed as set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as computed in New Horizons for the Retarded.[6]

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[7]

ORDER

The Respondent, Franzia Brothers Winery, Ripon, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Suspending, discharging, or refusing to reinstate employees for striking or for engaging in strike-related conduct unless such employees engaged in misconduct that under the circumstances may reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate other employees in the exercise of their rights protected under the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway immediate and full reinstatement to their former position or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the unlawful discharges and notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in Ripon, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[8] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.[9]

[6] 283 NLRB 1173 (1987). Interest will be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621.

[7] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[8] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

[9] The General Counsel requests a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil procedure subject to the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of this case, I find it unnecessary to include such a clause. Accordingly, I deny the General Counsel's request. See Cherokee Marine Terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988).

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT discharge or discipline employees for engaging in a lawful economic strike or their strike-related activities, unless such employees engage in misconduct that under the circumstances may reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate other employees in the exercise of their rights protected under the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Robert Whitley, Richelle Beckerdite, and Donald Treadway immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and we will make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL notify each of them that we have removed from our files any reference to these discharge and that the discipline will not be used against them in any way.

FRANZIA BROTHERS WINERY

Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Puerto Rico and Congreso de Uniones Industriales de Puerto Rico. Case 24–CA–5524

August 23, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On March 25, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Donald R. Holley issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed limited exceptions and a brief in support of the judge's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[1]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Puerto Rico, Rio Piedras, San Juan, Puerto Rico, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(a).

"(a) Failing and refusing to recognize and bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with any duly certified representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All mechanics and mechanic helpers employed by Respondent at its Rio Piedras facility in San Juan, Puerto Rico, excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act."

2. Substitute the following for paragraphs 2(a) and (b).

"(a) On request, recognize and bargain with any duly certified representative of the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the understanding in a signed agreement.

"(b) Post at its Rio Piedras, San Juan, Puerto Rico facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[10] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 24, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the adminstrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to recognize and bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with any duly certified representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All mechanics and mechanic helpers employed at our Rio Piedras facility in San Juan, Puerto Rico, excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, recognize and bargain collectively with any duly certified representative of all employees in the appropriate unit with respect

---

[1] We find merit in the General Counsel's request that the notice be posted in Spanish as well as English. We shall modify the recommended Order accordingly.

On May 20, 1988, the Respondent filed a motion to admit new evidence and dismiss the complaint pursuant to a disclaimer of interest dated May 5, 1988, that it had recieved from the Union. The Union stated in effect that it no longer was interested in representing the unit employees. In its motion, the Respondent contends the Union's disclaimer relieves it of any obligation to bargain with the Union and that the present controversy is moot. The General Counsel's opposition to the motion contends that although the Union's disclaimer relieves the Respondent of bargaining with that particular Union, it does not negate the judge's finding that the Respondent violated the Act and that it has an obligation to bargain in good faith with any other labor organization that is duly selected by the unit employees to represent them. The General Counsel also states that the unit employees are entitled to a Board order and the posting of a notice for without such their Sec. 7 rights will have been chilled. In this regard, the General Counsel requests that the judge's recommended Order be modified to require the Respondent to bargain with any duly certified representative of its employees in the designated appropriate unit. We find merit to the Respondent's motion only to the extent that it requests admission of the Union's disclaimer. However, in agreement with the General Counsel, we find that the issues are not moot and the complaint should not be dismissed. Furthermore, in order to effectuate the purposes of the Act, we shall order the Respondent to bargain with any duly certified representative of its unit employees.

to rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

WELLS FARGO ARMORED SERVICE CORPORATION OF PUERTO RICO

Virginia Milan Giol, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Thomas Franklin, Esq., of Atlanta, Georgia, for the Respondent.
Arturo Figueroa, for the Union.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

DONALD R. HOLLEY, Administrative Law Judge. On an original charge filed by Congreso de Uniones Industriales de Puerto Rico (the Union) on 10 February 1987 and an amended charge filed on 31 March 1987, the Regional Director for Region 24 of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint on 31 March 1987 that alleged, in substance, that by withdrawing its recognition of the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of specified employees on or about 11 August 1986, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Puerto Rico (the Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act. By timely answer, Respondent denied it had violated the Act as alleged. Although Respondent admitted in its answer that it withdrew recognition from the Unon on or about 11 August 1986, it pleaded affirmatively that "1. The six month statute of limitations has expired on the basis of this charge. 2. The Union's certification year expired on 9 January 1986. 3. The Union made no effort to represent the employees from October 1985 until March 1986."

The case was heard in Hato Rey, Puerto Rico, on 26 October 1987. All parties appeared and were afforded full opportunity to participate. On the entire record, including posthearing briefs filled by the parties, and from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses who appeared to give testimony, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a Tennessee corporation authorized to do business in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, engages in the transportation of money and valuables by means of armored trucks and related security services, and operates a facility located in Rio Piedras, San Juan, Puerto Rico. In the normal course of its business operations, it annually performs services valued in excess of $50,000 for banks and other enterprises within the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico which are engaged in interstate commerce, such as Banco Popular de Puerto Rico and Banco de Ponce. It is admitted, and I find, that Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. STATUS OF LABOR ORGANIZATION

It is admitted, and I find, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

The facts in the instant case are not in dispute.[1] Summarized, the record reveals the following

On 9 January 1985 the Union was certified by the Board as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the following unit:

> All mechanics and mechanic helpers employed by the Employer [Respondent] at its San Juan Branch located at Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico, excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.[2]

At the time of the certification, Respondent employed two mechanics and one mechanic helper. The unit consisted of two employees at the time of the hearing because one mechanic had left Respondent's employ.

After an exchange of correspondence, the parties engaged in negotiations in Puerto Rico on 19, 20, 21, and 22 August 1985, and 1, 2, and 3 October 1985. Thomas Franklin, assistant vice president of labor relations, and Luis A. Berrios, vice president-general manager of Puerto Rico operations, represented Respondent. Arturo Figueroa, the Union's president, and Charles E. Ayala, an employee and a member of the bargaining unit, represented the Union.

Disagreement on undisclosed economic and noneconomic matters prevented the parties from reaching agreement on a contract during negotiations.

On 7 October 1985 Respondent, through Franklin, sent the Union a final offer. The letter transmitting the final offer was placed in the record, but the final offer was not. The body of Franklin's letter states:[3]

> Enclosed you will find a completed copy of the final offer of Wells Fargo in our collective bargaining. This copy represents the entire contract which includes agreed upon language and nonagreed upon final positions of Wells Fargo.
>
> It has become very evident to me that you do not know how to conduct the art to negotiations. Your continual refusal to make counter proposals or to change positions leaves us at impasse.
>
> This is Wells Fargo's final position on all issues. You are naturally free to pursue whatever course of action you choose. A copy of the final offer has been given to each of the mechanics. Please let Mr.

[1] Counsel for the General Counsel conducted her case-in-chief by adducing testimony through two union representatives and one employee, and through the introduction of certain documentary evidence. The witnesses testified in a straightforward manner and I credit their uncontroverted testimony. Respondent elected to rest without presenting a defense at the conclusion of the General Counsel's case.

[2] Appropriateness of the unit is not in dispute.

[3] G.C. Exh. 11.

> Berrios know what the decision is regarding acceptance or rejection of this contract.

On 10 October 1985, Franklin sent the Union a second letter, which contained essentially the same verbage contained in the above-quoted letter.[4]

The Union did not immediately respond in writing to Franklin's October letters. Instead, its president, A. Figueroa, contacted Respondent General Manager Berrios in November and December 1985, and in January and February 1986, to request that Respondent schedule a meeting at which negotiations whould be continued. The record fails to reveal that the Union made any counterproposals to Respondent's last offer. A. Figueroa credibly testified that Berrios "intertained" him during the above described telephone conversations by telling him negotiations were Franklin's problem and he would attempt to contact Franklin.

By letter dated 10 March 1986, the Union demanded in writing that Respondent meet with it to continue negotiations. Berrios forwarded the letter to Franklin. By letter dated 7 April 1986, Franklin responded to the Union's 10 March letter stating, inter alia:

> I have been informed that you have contacted our San Juan office and that you wish to continue negotiations between your union and our company.
>
> I would like to point out a few factors to you: Your certification began on January 9, 1985. Clearly, one year of presumed representation has expired. Additionally, we last met in October at which time, in essence, you refused to bargain and we declared impasse. We presented you with our final offer in October and heard nothing from you as to whether or not your people had accepted it or not. I do not see that anything has changed between now and then. I do not see what could be accomplished nor do I understand the purpose of continuing negotiations. You have our final offer.
>
> If you wish, you can let me know your opinion as to these items.

The Union responded to Franklin's 7 April 1986 letter by demanding in writing on 15 July 1986 that Respondent meet with the Union to conclude negotiations within 20 days.

Respondent admits in its answer that it withdrew recognition from the Union on or about 11 August 1986. Withdrawal of recognition was accomplished by a letter from Franklin to A. Figueroa dated 8 August 1986. A. Figueroa credibly testified he did not receive the letter until on or after 11 August 1986.[5] The body of Franklin's letter states.[6]

> A copy of your 15 July, 1986 letter has been referred to me. As you are aware, I wrote you a letter on 7 April, 1986 explaining the company's position.
>
> I will remind you of the facts. Your union's certification began on January 9, 1985. The one year of presumed certification expired seven (7) months ago. The company presented you with a final offer and heard nothing from you. If you were willing to accept that offer, you should have signed the contract and returned it. You did not do so. All issues have been discussed and negotiated. There would be no point in further negotiations.
>
> In considering the factors present here:
>
> 1. The union did not accept the final offer.
> 2. The employees did not strike the company.
> 3. The best offer was made in October 1985 and you did not contact the company again until April 1986. Your union abandoned the unit.
> 4. The union's certification year expired in January 1986. Thus, union no longer represents the mechanics.
>
> I hope this clairifies [sic] the issue and our position in this matter.

By letter dated 19 August 1986 A. Figueroa informed Franklin he did not agree with the allegations and or position of Respondent set forth in Franklin's 8 August 1986 letter, and he demanded that Respondent meet with the Union within 15 days to continue negotiations. Respondent did not respond. Subsequently, by letters dated 14 October 1986, 17 February 1987, 13 March 1987, the Union requested that Respondent meet to continue negotiations. Respondent did not reply until 3 April 1987. At that time, Franklin informed the Union, that Respondent would not meet further with it until ordered to do so by the Board.[7]

The original charge was filed in the instant case on 10 February 1987. It alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by "refusing to meet to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement alleging the Union no longer represents the employees." The charge was amended on 31 March 1987 to allege specifically that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act on 11 August 1986 by "unlawfully withdrawing recognition from the . . . Union and thereafter refusing to meet to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement."

Analysis and Conclusions

Respondent interposes two defenses in the instant case, i.e., it claims the complaint is time barred by Section 10(b) of the Act and it claims it possessed a good-faith doubt that the Union represented a majority of the unit employees when it withdrew recognition by the letter dated 8 August 1986. I find both contentions to be without merit.

Respondent's contention that the complaint is time barred by Section 10(b) of the Act is grounded on a contention that the original charge, which was filed on 10 February 1987, failed to specifically allege that it had

[4] G.C. Exh. 12.

[5] The date of 8 August was a Friday. The letter was mailed in Atlanta, Georgia, on 8 August, and Figueroa testified his office is closed on Saturday and Sunday and he could not have received the letter until Monday, 11 August, at the earliest.

[6] G.C. Exh. 16(a).

[7] G.C. Exh. 22.

violated Section 8(a)(5) by withdrawing recognition from the Union during the 6-month period preceding the filing of the charge. Respondent contends, in effect, that the complaint is based on the amended charge, which did specifically allege withdrawal of recognition, and was not filed until 31 March 1987, a date more than 6 months after 11 August 1985.

In National Licorice v. NLRB., 309 U.S. 350 (1940), and in NLRB v. Fant Milling Co., 360 U.S. 301 (1959), the Supreme Court rejected contentions that the Board is limited in framing complaints to specific matters alleged in a charge. In Fant Milling, the Court addressed the issue now before me stating (at 307):

> A charge filed with the Labor Board is not to be measured by the standards applicable to a pleading in a private lawsuit. Its purpose is merely to set in motion the machinery of an inquiry. Labor Board v. I & M Electric Co., 318 U.S. 9, 18. The responsibility of making that inquiry, and of framing the issues in the case is one that Congress has imposed upon the Board, not the charging party. To confine the Board in its inquiry and in framing the complaint to the specific matters alleged in the charge would reduce the statutory machinery to a vehicle for the vindication of private rights. This would be alien to the basic purpose of the Act.

More recently, in NLRB v. Antonio's Restaurant, 648 F.2d 1206 (9th Cir. 1981), the court discussed sufficiency of a complaint and applicability of Section 10(b), stating (at 1210):

> Actions before the Board are not subject to the technical pleading requirements of a private lawsuit. North American Rockwell Corp. v. NLRB, 389 F.2d 866, 870 (10th Cir. 1968). The charge need not be technically precise so long as it generally informs the party charged of the nature of the alleged violations, and the general allegations in the charge may later be supplemented or amplified by more specific allegations which "relate back" to the date the charge was filed.

In sum, it is clear that the complaint allegation that Respondent unlawfully withdrew recognition from the instant Union on 11 August 1986 is closely related to the allegation in the original charge, which asserted Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) by "refusing to meet and negotiate a collective-bargaining agreement alleging the Union no longer represents the employees." The filing of the amended charge, which alleged specifically that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) by withdrawing recognition from the Union, constituted proper, but unnecessary action. Contrary to Respondent, the more specific allegation related back to the date the original charge was filed. Accordingly, Section 10(b) of the Act is not applicable here.

Remaining for resolution is Respondent's claim that the Union's actions from the time Respondent made a final offer on 7 October 1985, until 10 March 1986, the date the Union requested in writing that negotiations be resumed, legally entitled it to withdraw recognition from the Union by letter dated 8 August 1986. As noted, supra, Respondent admits in its answer that it withdrew recognition from the Union on or about 11 August 1986.

In Terrell Machine Co., 173 NLRB 1480 (1969), enfd. 427 F.2d 1088 (4th Cir. (1990)), the Board set forth the legal principles to be applied in situations when an employer seeks to withdraw recognition from an established bargaining representative, stating, inter alia:

> It is well settled that a certified union, upon expiration of the first year following its certification, enjoys a rebuttable presumption that its majority representative status continues. This presumption is designed to promote stability in collective-bargaining relationships, without impairing the free choice of employees. Accordingly, once the presumption is shown to be operative, a prima facie case is established that an employer is obligated to bargain and that its refusal to do so would be unlawful. The prima facie case may be rebutted if the employer affirmatively establishes either (1) that at the time of the refusal the union in fact no longer enjoyed majority representative status; or (2) that the employer's refusal was predicated on a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt of the union's continued majority status. As to the second of these. As to the second of these, i.e., "good faith doubt," two prerequisites for sustaining the defense are that the asserted doubt must be based on objective considerations and it must not have been advanced for the purpose of gaining time in which to undermine the Union.

In the instant case, the considerations, which allegedly caused Respondent to withdraw recognition from the Union, are set forth in Franklin's 8 August 1986 letter. They are:

> 1. The union did not accept the final offer.
> 2. The employees did not strike the company.
> 3. The best offer was made in October 1985 and you did not contact the company again until April 1986. Your union abandoned the unit.
> 4. The union's certification year expired in January 1986. Thus, union no longer represents the mechanics.

In its brief (at 4), Respondent clarifies its position concerning the first three numbered items set forth above by contending "The Company believed that the union's lack of action on the final offer and the lapse of time between the final offer on 7 October 1985 and the letter on 10 March 1986 indicated that the union lacked support of its unit members." I find the contention to be without merit. Similar contentions were made and rejected by Judge Michael O. Miller, with subsequent Board approval, in Flex Plastics, 262 NLRB 651 (1982). There, it was observed that the Board discussed the duty of an employer during a period of impasse in International Medication Systems, 253 NLRB 863 (1980), stating, inter alia, at fn. 3:

> We have long held that, while an impasse may suspend bargaining for a time, it "does not relieve an employer from the continuing duty to take no action . . . which amounts to a withdrawal of recognition of the Union's representative status." Central Metallic Casket Co., 91 NLRB 572, 574 (1950). Thus whether the parties arrived at an impasse is irrelevant to an evaluation of Respondent's asserted good faith and reasonably grounded doubt of the Union's majority status.

Patently, neither the existence of an impasse nor the failure of the Union or the employees to accept the Company's final offer or strike enabled Respondent to legally withdraw recognition from the Union.

Turning to the contention the union inaction entitled Respondent to question the Union's majority status, I reject the argument for two reasons. First, I note that the facts, supra, fail to factually support Respondent's contention. In this regard, I have credited the testimony of the Union's president, which was to the effect that he contacted Respondent's general manager in November and December 1985, and in January and February 1986, to demand a resumption of bargaining. Moreover, I credit the same individual's assertion that Berrios merely "intertained" him by promising to contact Franklin, but accomplishing nothing. Clearly, if there was inaction during the period of impasse, it was respondent rather than union inaction. Assuming, arguendo, however, that the Union was inactive for a period of 4–5 months during late 1985 and early 1986, case precedent reveals that by demanding a resumption of bargaining through its 10 March 1986 letter, which reached Franklin, it engaged in activity that negated any inference to be drawn from alleged inactivity. Flex Plastics, supra at 657.[8]

Finally, the principles enunciated in Terrell Machine clearly reveal the mere expiration of the Union's certification year could not serve as the basis for Respondent's alleged formation of a good-faith doubt that the Union did not enjoy majority status on or about 11 August 1986.

In sum, I find, for the above-stated reasons, that Respondent has failed to rebut the presumption that the Union represented a majority of its employees in the unit admitted to be appropriate when Respondent withdrew recognition from the Union on or about 11 August 1986. Accordingly, I find, as alleged, that by engaging in such action, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act as alleged.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Puerto Rico is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(6) of the Act.

3. All mechanics and mechanic helpers employed by Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Puerto Rico at its Rio Piedras facility in San Juan, excluding all other employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. By withdrawing recognition from Congreso de Uniones Industriales de Puerto Rico as the exclusive bargaining agent of Respondent's employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit on or about 11 August 1986, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order it to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully withdrew recognition from the Union as the exclusive bargaining agent of employees in the appropriate unit described above, and that it, on request, bargain collectively with the Union regarding the rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment of unit employees and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

Finally, although the General Counsel requests that a visitatorial clause be included in any order issued in this case, I note the Board has declined to include such clauses in cases that do not appear to pose complicated compliance problems. See, for example, Cherokee terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988). In my view, the order in this case will pose no significant compliance problems.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[9]

ORDER

The Respondent, Wells Fargo Armored Service Corporation of Rio Piedras, San Juan, Puerto Rico, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to recognize and bargain with Congreso de Uniones Industriales de Puerto Rico as the exclusive bargaining representative of employees in the following appropriate unit.

> All mechanics and mechanic helpers employed by Respondent at its Rio Piedras facility in San Juan, Puerto Rico, excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, recognize and bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

[8] See also Pioneer Inn, 228 NLRB 1263, 1265 (1979), enfd. 578 F.2d 835 (9th Cir. 1978); Road Materials, 193 NLRB 990 (1971).

[9] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(b) Post at its Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[10] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 24, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[10] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Monotech of Mississippi and International Union of Operating Engineers, Local Union 624, AFL–CIO. Case 26–CA–12635

August 23, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On May 27, 1988, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint alleging that the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act by refusing the Union's request to bargain following the Union's certification in Case 26–RC–6929. (Official notice is taken of the "record" in the representation proceeding as defined in the Board's Rules and Regulations, Secs. 102.68 and 102.69(g); Frontier Hotel, 265 NLRB 343 (1982).) The Respondent filed its answer admitting in part and denying in part the allegations in the complaint.

On June 27, 1988, the General Counsel filed a motion to transfer case to Board and for Summary Judgment. On June 29, 1988, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Respondent filed a response.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

In its answer the Respondent admits its refusal to bargain, but attacks the validity of the certification on the basis of the Board's disposition of certain challenged ballots in the representation proceeding.

All representation issues raised by the Respondent were or could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding. The Respondent does not offer to adduce at a hearing any newly discovered and previously unavailable evidence, nor does it allege any special circumstances that would require the Board to reexamine the decision made in the representation proceeding. We therefore find that the Respondent has not raised any representation issue that is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. See Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. NLRB, 313 U.S. 146, 162 (1941).[1] Accordingly, we grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent, a corporation with an office and place of business in Iuka, Mississippi, has been engaged in the fabrication of steel products. During the past 12 months, a representative period, the Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, sold and shipped from its facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Mississippi. During the same period, the Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and received at its facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Mississippi. We find that the Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Certification

Following the election held May 7, 1987, the Union was certified on April 20, 1988, as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its Route 4, Box 650, Iuka, Mississippi facilities, excluding all other employees, office clericals, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The Union continues to be the exclusive representative under Section 9(a) of the Act.

B. Refusal to Bargain

Since about May 9, 1988, the Union has requested the Respondent to bargain, and since about May 19, 1988, the Respondent has refused. We find that this refusal constitutes an unlawful refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By refusing since about May 19, 1988, to bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the appropriate unit, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor

[1] In its answer, the Respondent denies, inter alia, par. 1 of the complaint that alleges that the instant charge was filed by the Union on May 24, 1988, and a copy was served by certified mail on the Respondent on May 24, 1988. The General Counsel, however, has submitted the affidavit of service of the charge and the post office return receipt that indicates that the charge was received by the Respondent on May 26, 1988. Accordingly, we find that the Respondent's denial raises no material issue of fact warranting a hearing.

The Respondent also denies par. 5 of the complaint that alleges that at all times material, the Union has been a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act. Because this denial raises an issue that could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding, we find that it does not warrant a hearing.

practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, we shall order it to cease and desist, to bargain on request with the Union, and, if an understanding is reached, to embody the understanding in a signed agreement.

To ensure that the employees are accorded the services of their selected bargaining agent for the period provided by law, we shall construe the initial period of the certification as beginning the date the Respondent begins to bargain in good faith with the Union. Mar-Jac Poultry Co., 136 NLRB 785 (1962); Lamar Hotel, 140 NLRB 226, 229 (1962), enfd. 328 F.2d 600 (5th Cir. 1964), cert. denied 379 U.S. 817 (1964); Burnett Construction Co., 149 NLRB 1419, 1421 (1964), enfd. 350 F.2d 57 (10th Cir. 1965).

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Monotech of Mississippi, Iuka, Mississippi, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain with International Union of Operating Engineers, Local Union 624, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit concerning terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the understanding in a signed agreement:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its Route 4, Box 650, Iuka, Mississippi facilities, excluding all other employees, office clericals, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Post at its facility in Iuka, Mississippi, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[2] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 26, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[2] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain with International Union of Operating Engineers, Local Union 624, AFL–CIO as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the Union and put in writing and sign any agreement reached on terms and conditions of employment for our employees in the bargaining unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by us at our Route 4, Box 650, Iuka, Mississippi facilities, excluding all other employees, office clericals, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

MONOTECH OF MISSISSIPPI

Clemson Bros., Inc. and Local Lodge 1835, International Association of Machinists & Aerospace Workers, AFL–CIO. Case 2–CA–18592

August 24, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On January 28, 1983, Administrative Law Judge Eleanor MacDonald issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions as modified below and to adopt the judge's recommended Order.

1. The judge found that the Respondent violated its good-faith bargaining obligation under NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149 (1956), first by rejecting the Union's economic bargaining demands based on a claim that the business was losing money and then refusing to grant the Union's demands for verification of that claim.

The Respondent's exceptions contend that no Truitt disclosure obligation arose because rather than claiming inability to pay it gave repeated assurances that the Respondent could afford to grant the Union's bargaining demands. We find the Respondent's exceptions lacking in merit.

When the entire course of conduct is examined, the Respondent's disclaimer of having made a financial inability claim rings hollow. The Respondent reiterated that because of losses incurred and continuing in the manufacturing operation, it needed to cut unit costs by 30 percent over 3 years and it emphasized at the bargaining table that in the prior 4 years it had sustained large losses, reciting the loss figures for each of those years. The Board does not require an express plea of poverty to invoke the application of Truitt. It is sufficient if the employer's words and conduct specifically link its bargaining position to economic hardship.[2] Here, it is plain from the statements concerning continued annual losses and the need to substantially reduce unit labor costs over the next 3 years that the Respondent, despite its incantation of an ability to afford higher wages, was basing its rejections on its business losses. In fact, its statement of "unwillingness," i.e., that it did not make sense to pay higher wages, was admittedly predicated on the same asserted manufacturing losses.[3] Thus, the Respondent's statements specifically linked its bargaining position to economic hardship.

Moreover, the Respondent's rejection of the Union's demands was solely predicated on the poor financial health of this, its only business. Its reiteration of its claim concerning the profitability of its business as a ground for rejecting the Union's demands put the validity of that claim into issue. It is immaterial whether the Respondent also revealed that it had other resources, unconnected with its business, that it chose not to use in meeting the Union's demands. The Union might reasonably assume that the Respondent expected the business to pay for itself.[4] Therefore, the Respondent's repeated claims that, because of the plant's unprofitability, it needed concessions, including a wage freeze, and elimination of the February 1 COLA, amounted to an assertion of inability rather than unwillingness to pay for the Union's demands. Thus the Union was entitled under Truitt to substantiation of the Respondent's claims, which likely would have furthered the bargaining process.[5] We,

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] E. I. duPont & Co., 276 NLRB 335, 336 (1985). See also Cowin & Co., 277 NLRB 802 fn. 1 (1985) (despite its assertions to the contrary, the employer "was in fact expressing financial inability to pay"). Nielsen Lithographing Co., 279 NLRB 877 fn. 3 (1986) ("by its words and conduct" the employer "conveyed to the Union an inability to pay . . . and thus triggered a duty to disclose financial information"). Coast Engraving, 282 NLRB 1236 fn. 1 (1987) (employer had to have a wage freeze "in order to stay in business and recoup some bad losses they had [in] the first few months of the year").

[3] The relevant test, as recently reiterated by the Seventh Circuit in NLRB v. Harvstone Mfg. Corp., 785 F.2d 570, 575 (7th Cir. 1986), "is to ascertain whether the employer said it 'would not' as opposed to 'could not' pay the employees' proposed demands." (Citing United Fire Proof Warehouse Co. v. NLRB, 356 F.2d 494, 498 (7th Cir. 1966).)

The court in Harvstone found the seeking of concessions because of the competitiveness of the market was not an assertion of financial inability. In contrast, the Respondent has asserted no claim of competitive disadvantage in the instant case.

[4] See United States Steel Corp., 122 NLRB 1519, 1525–1526 (1959) (where employer (U.S. Steel) said it was financially able to meet the union's demands (for zinc mine employees) but claimed the zinc mine was operating at a loss), and Celotex Corp., 146 NLRB 48, 52–54 (1964) (in which the employer's statement that it had the ability to pay whatever it thought was right, was evaluated in light of the additional statements that the plant was not being operated profitably and that the negotiations would be on the basis of the labor costs which the plant, not the entire corporate operations, could afford).

[5] The objective of the disclosure obligation is to enable the parties to perform their statutory function responsibly and "to promote an intelligent resolution of issues at an early stage and without industrial strife." Monarch Machine Tool Co., 227 NLRB 1265, 1268 (1977). Compare the Board's recent decisions in Atlanta Hilton & Tower, 271 NLRB 1600 (1984), and Advertisers Mfg. Co., 275 NLRB 100 (1985), in which numerous employer reasons for refusing union bargaining demands were found to have demonstrated unwillingness rather than financial inability, and where requiring production of demanded financial information would therefore not have served the bargaining process.

therefore, find that the Respondent's repeated refusals to allow verification of its asserted financial inability contravened its duty to bargain in good faith, in violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.[6]

2. The judge found that the Respondent's lockout of its bargaining unit employees before reaching a bargaining impasse on February 1, 1982, was motivated by a desire to avoid paying the COLA or bargaining further with the Union, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1). In light of this finding, the judge also found similar violations in the Respondent's use of temporary replacements for the locked-out employees and the offers of reinstatement conditioned on the discriminatorily locked-out employees' waiving the COLA and pension and dental plan payments provided by the contract. Further, the Respondent's reinstatement offer constituted direct dealing with employees in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) because the offer differed from the contract agreed to by the parties. And similarly, the Respondent's cessation of contractual payments, including pension and dental plan contributions and the COLA payment, concurrent with the lockout, constituted unlawful unilateral changes.

The Respondent excepts to the above findings of the judge because the parties had reached impasse and thus the lockout and other events that followed were lawful. In support of these exceptions, the Respondent contends that the judge's finding of no bargaining impasse is erroneous and based solely on her unsupportable refusal-to-bargain finding. The Respondent further argues that it had the right, under article 33 of its contract,[7] to lock out its employees if no new agreement was reached within 60 days after negotiations were reopened.

We disagree with the Respondent. We concur in the judge's finding that the Respondent failed to bargain in good faith because it refused to allow the Union to verify its asserted inability to pay for the Union's demands. We, therefore, conclude that there can be no impasse because the cause of the alleged deadlock was the Respondent's own failure to bargain in good faith.[8] Thus the Respondent was engaged in bad-faith bargaining at the point when it initiated the lockout and it maintained the lockout while continuing to refuse to bargain in good faith with the Union.[9] And it is the Respondent's avoidance of its bargaining obligation in instituting the lockout,[10] rather than the absence of a lawful impasse, which renders the lockout violative of Section 8(a)(3) and (1).[11] Furthermore, the Respondent's reliance on its contractual right to terminate the contract and lock out employees is unavailing because article 33 states that such actions are dependent on the parties' good-faith bargaining.

Finally, the Respondent thereafter conditioned rehiring of the laid-off employees on their willingness to waive contractual COLA and pension and dental benefits. Such actions, as found by the judge, were clearly discriminatory as well as inimical to the collective-bargaining process. We, therefore, adopt the judge's findings that the Respondent unlawfully locked out and temporarily replaced its employees[12] as well as her other findings of violations flowing from that unlawful lockout, and we adopt her "make-whole" Order.[13]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Clemson Brothers, Inc., Middleton, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the at-[6] The judge found the Respondent's reneging on Schrade's promise to offer a wage increase to be evidence of bad-faith bargaining. Contrary to the judge, in light of the Respondent's consistent bargaining position that it would grant increases only if total labor costs did not increase, we do not infer bad faith from the Respondent's decision to overrule the promise to offer a wage increase that was not tied to any commensurate benefit reduction.

[7] The contract provides as follows:

(33.0) . . . Either party may serve a written notice upon the other sixty (60) days prior to November 1, 1981 to amend the wage rates and fringe benefits provided for in this agreement. Upon receipt of such notice, the other party will meet immediately and negotiate in good faith concerning the modifications proposed.

(33.1) In the event that the parties fail to agree on the modifications proposed within sixty (60) days after receipt of the aforesaid notice, any limitation upon the right of the union to strike established by the terms expressed or implied of this agreement shall terminate on and after the sixtieth (60th) day following the receipt of the aforesaid notice. In the event of a strike or lockout the contract shall terminate.

[8] Marine & Shipbuilding Workers v. NLRB, 320 F.2d 615, 621 (3d Cir. 1963).

[9] American Ship Building Co. v. NLRB, 380 U.S. 300 (1965); Vore Cinema Corp., 254 NLRB 1288 (1981).

[10] "Proper analysis of the problem [lockout] demands that the simple intention to support the employer's bargaining position . . . be distinguished from a hostility to the process of collective bargaining which could suffice to render a lockout unlawful." American Ship Building Co., 380 U.S. at 309. Here, as the judge found, the lockout was motivated by the Respondent's wish to avoid the COLA payment, a matter about which we have found the Respondent refused to bargain in good faith.

[11] Darling & Co., 171 NLRB 801, 803 (1968), enfd. sub nom. Lane v. NLRB, 418 F.2d 1208 (D.C. Cir. 1969).

[12] We note that the Board's recent decision in Harter Equipment, 280 NLRB 597 (1986), is inapplicable in this case which involves replacement of employees who were locked out unlawfully.

[13] We shall amend the judge's remedy by providing that the compliance proceeding herein address the question of whether the Respondent must pay any additional sums into employee benefit funds in order to satisfy the "make-whole" remedy. Merryweather Optical Co., 240 NLRB 1213 (1979).

In accordance with our decision in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987), interest on and after January 1, 1987, shall be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621. Interest on amounts accrued prior to January 1, 1987 (the effective date of the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621), shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

General Electric Company and Anthony Kandow, Gilbert Lapoint, Robert Ash, and Local 947, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE). Cases 7–CA–25874 and 7–CA–26535

September 20, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On March 9, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Elbert D. Gadsden issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.[1]

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[3]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, General Electric Company, Riverview, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

Insert the following as paragraph 1(d).

"(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

[1] The General Counsel also filed a motion to strike the Respondent's supporting brief.

[2] We agree with the General Counsel that the backpay and reinstatement issues raised by the Respondent's exceptions are matters that are appropriate for determination at the compliance stage of this proceeding. See Dean General Contractors, 285 NLRB 573 (1987). We thus find it unnecessary to pass on the General Counsel's motion to strike the Respondent's supporting brief.

[3] We shall modify the recommended Order to include the narrow cease-and-desist language customarily used by the Board and to conform to the notice.

Joseph P. Canfield, Esq., for the General Counsel.
John Corbett O'Meara, Esq. and Kathleen M. Hates, Esq., for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ELBERT D. GADSDEN, Administrative Law Judge. On charges of unfair labor practices filed on 30 May 1986 and 7 January 1987, respectively, by Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Robert Ash, and Local 947, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE), respectively, complaints were issued by the Regional Director for Region 7 on behalf of the General Counsel on 18 July 1986 and 12 February 1987, respectively. Both cases were consolidated for hearing on 18 February 1987.

The consolidated complaint alleged in substance that Respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, by laying off employees Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Robert Ash on 16 December 1985 and thereafter failing and refusing to recall them because of their sympathies for the Union, their roles as union officials, and their participation in a strike, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act; that by this conduct, the Respondent also discriminated against the four-named employees for the same reasons, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act; and that the Respondent further interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights, and failed and refused to bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees, by failing to furnish relevant information requested by the Union, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

The hearing in the above matter was held before me in Detroit, Michigan, on 18, 19, and 20 May 1987. Briefs have been received from counsel for the General Counsel and counsel for the Respondent, respectively, which have been carefully considered.

On the entire record in this case, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses and my consideration of the briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times material, the Respondent has maintained an office and place of business at One River Road in the City of Schenectady, New York (Respondent's place of business). The Respondent also maintains other plants in various States including the State of Michigan. Respondent's Riverview facility, located in Michigan, has been at all times engaged in the repair of industrial and commercial apparatus, and its Michigan facility is the only facility involved in this proceeding.

During the year ending 31 December 1985, a representative period, the Respondent at all times material had gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchased and caused to be transported and delivered at its Riverview facility, goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 that were transported and delivered to it directly from points located outside the State of Michigan.

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

best copy available

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that Local 947, United Electircal, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE) (the Union) is, and has been at all times material, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Respondent operates two business facilities, one located at Riverview, Michigan, and the other at Dearborn, Michigan. The Riverview facility is essentially a repair business operation. It prepares large electrical equipment such as generators, transformers, motors, and switchgears. The duration of such repair work varies from several hours to months, and the timing of intake orders for the work depends on equipment of business or other institutions breaking down or falling into ill repair. Consequently, some of the work is prescheduled and other work is occasioned by an emergency, sometimes necessitating the repairman to go to the jobsite of the equipment.

The Riverview facility consists of the following four departments: (1) The Inspection and Test Department—where equipment such as generators, motors, and power relays (switchgears, switches, and breakers) are tested. The facility is a diagnostic and repair center. (2) The Winding Department—where motors are rewound. (3) The Machine Department—where machine parts needed and repair work are made or modified, such as turning shafts. (4) The Repair Department—cleans the repaired equipment and performs assemly work.

The work performed at the Dearborn facility involves the repair of small instrumentations and requires different skills and equipment.

For many years, Respondent's employees at both facilities (Riverview and Dearborn) were represented by Local 947, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE). In November 1985, Respondent was performing an outside job to which it had assigned some of its employees from its Riverview facility. Respondent made a change in the method of pay to these employees which, the employees and the Union contend, was contrary to past practice and the Local contract in effect between the parties, which resulted in substantial monetary losses to the employees assigned to the outside job. Consequently, one of the employees assigned to the outside job filed a second-step grievance on the matter, which was denied. The grievance was advanced to the third step, where it was also denied.

The Local Union called a strike and pursuant to the contract, filed a 24-hour notice on management of the Riverview facility, for both the Riverview and Dearborn facilities and the employees assigned to the outside job, and the Riverview facility went on strike on Friday, 6 December 1985. The Dearborn facility went on strike Monday, 9 December 1985. On 15 December, the Union notified Respondent that the employees had voted to return to work. About 1 hour later, two of the employees who participated in the strike were called by their foreman and informed that they and another employee were laid off for lack of work. On 30 May 1986, the three laid-off employees filed a charge with the Board alleging that they were discriminated against by Respondent for their leadership roles in the strike; and that by Respondent commencing to assign more overtime work, and staffing jobs with employees who were outside the job classification and/or with less seniority than the laid-off employees.

Respondent admitted that at all times material the following named persons, and their positions, have been and are now supervisors of Respondent, within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, and are its agents: Ed McGivern, manager until approximately 31 December 1985; Carl Spevetz, manager since approximately 1 January 1986; and George Hudguins, foreman.[1]

Respondent admitted that the appropriate unit for collective bargaining is as follows:

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its Riverview, Michigan, facility; but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitutes a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

A. The Financial Status of Respondent's Business and its Management-Employee Relations

In or about 1975 there were approximately 160 employees employed at Respondent's Riverview facility. However, commensurate with declining business in the Detroit vicinity, Respondent was forced to reduce its work force to a unit of 25 employees, where it was stablized since approximately 1979.

The uncontroverted and credited evidence of record established that Anthony Kandow was employed by Respondent from 1963 until 16 December 1985, when he was laid off indefinitely. Although employed by Respondent, Kandow worked in the inspection, test, and switch and gear departments, which work experiences involved inspecting and testing voltage switchgears and maintaining switches at customer locations. Requirements for the performance of these jobs, Kandow said, were some mechanical skills and common sense. He worked under the supervision of Foreman George Hudgins, who reported to Plant Manager Carl Spevetz.

During his working tenure with Respondent, Kandow has served as recording secretary, secretary, steward, chief steward, and since 1984, president of the Union. While serving as president, Kandow filed twice as many grievances as any previous union administration. Other officers of the Union during his late presidency were Gil LaPoint, vice president; Ray Young, financial secretary; George Vesich, chief steward; Leo Kandow (brother of Anthony Kandow), steward; and Bynum Callahan. The union trustees were Agnes DeMuth, Roger Ash, and Dave Carter.

On approximately 25 November 1985, Kandow was assigned to a job at the Pontiac Motor Truck and Bus

[1] The facts set forth above are not disputed and are not in conflict in the record.

Company, performing preventive maintenance work. This work involved testing, cleaning and repairing switches and gear equipment. With him on this assignment were fellow workers Jim Christini, Dave Poleznski, and Robert Johnson.

At the time of the work assignment to the Pontiac job, Foreman McGivern told Kandow and his fellow workers that they would be paid "in lieu of the regular practice of overtime for out-of-town work," a difference of about $300 less in pay. The Union expressed its objection to the announced pay method, and Kandow filed a second-step grievance, but it was denied by management. The Union processed the grievance to the third step on an emergency basis where it was also denied. Kandow explained that the Union's national agreement contains an arbitration clause, but it applies only to grievances for discipline and not for hours pay procedure.

The Union's executive board, which included Gil LaPoint, met and decided to give a 24-hour notice to the Company of its anticipated strike. Two notices were delivered to Foreman Ed McGivern, plant manager, on that same date, 5 December. Plant Manager McGivern said only one notice was necessary, and he accepted one notice and destroyed the other notice for the Dearborn facility.

On 6 December 1985 the Union's executive committee approached Plant Manager McGivern and Foreman Hudgins and informed them the strike would begin immediately. Thereafter Kandow and other members of the union committee went to the Riverview employees and told them, "Let's walk out," and they walked out and established a picket line in front of the plant. Kandow went to the Dearborn facility and asked the employees there to walk out, but he was informed they could not walk out legally because the Dearborn management had not been given the 24-hour notice. After consulting with the International, Kandow delivered a letter to Joseph Daily, manager of the Dearborn facility, advising of the strike. On Monday morning, 9 December 1985, Kandow went to the Dearborn employees and called them out on strike. The employees heeded his call.

Picketing

Kandow and LaPoint picketed Riverview on Saturday and Sunday, 7 and 8 December, respectively. On Monday, 9 December, most of the Riverview employees picketed in the morning and left, while Kandow, Roger Ash, Leo Kandow, and George Vesich continued picketing the remainder of the day, except when Anthony Kandow and LaPoint went to the Dearborn plant to see about the strikers there. Both Anthony Kandow and Gil LaPoint testified that as they picketed they saw management (Hudgins and Spevetz) looking out of the windows and doors at them in front of the shop and also on the parking lot. Management also observed them (LaPoint, Tony Kandow, Leo Kandow, Roger Ash, and sometimes George Vesich) picketing as they (member of management) went out of the plant and returned from lunch.

About 4 p.m. on 15 December 1985, the Union sent management a telegram advising that the strike had been terminated. A few minutes later, Foreman Hudgins called Anthony Kandow on the telephone and informed him he was laid off. Kandow asked Hudgins was he the only one laid off and Hudgins said, "Gil LaPoint, and he was going to call LaPoint and Roger Ash to notify them that they were laid off." LaPoint verified that he had been called by Foreman Hudgins on 15 December at 7 or 8 p.m. and informed that he was going to be laid off and should not report for work the next day. He said he did not receive a written notification, which was the usual practice. However, the record contains a written notice (G.C. Exh. 20) dated 16 December 1985 to Gil LaPoint indicating indefinite layoff. It was signed by George Hudgins.

The Union filed a grievance for the Company's failure to give the employees 5 days notice or 5 days pay before they were laid off on 15 December 1985. Approximately seven other grievances were subsequently filed regarding work being performed by persons out of classification or lacking in seniority. During a grievance meeting in early January 1986, Foreman Hudgins told Anthony Kandow and the union representative it was all right to lay off the employees without notice at the end of the strike because a notice was not necessary under those circumstances.

On the second grievance the Union (Kandow) complained to management about junior employees working in the switchgear department, and management said it "had the right people." Kandow said the union contract provides that layoffs will be by seniority, except management is allowed to take into consideration the ability of the worker, and the Company's past practice was layoff by seniority.

Before the strike the Union grieved the fact that employee Melton was performing machinist Ash's welding job. McGivern said the Company felt it had to keep Roger Ash because of his welding experience. The Union then requested management to keep Ash as a welder, but the Company said no, because the Company might need him as a welder and it would have him there.

The Union grieved the fact that Gil LaPoint had not been recalled and management said it "kept the right people."

After the strike on 16 December 1985, Union Steward Kandow stated that there was 25 to 50 percent overtime work performed at the Riverview facility. Leo Kandow, brother of Anthony Kandow, was a union steward in 1983 and 1984. After the strike Leo Kandow returned to work. He corroborated the unrebutted testimony of Anthony Kandow that after the strike there was a lot of work at Riverview, which lasted until about March 1986. Some of the work involved work to correct citations issued by OSHA against Respondent in January or February 1986, and the employees with overtime performed the work that made the corrections. Leo Kandow continued working and filing grievances until he was laid off 5 August 1986.

Gil LaPoint was employed by the Respondent for 30 years until he was laid off on 15 December 1985. He was classified repair "A." Previously he worked in receiving and shipping as repair "B" 4 years; inspection and test "B" 1-1/2 years; transformer "B," transformer repair "A" for 10 years; and repair "A" from then on. He worked in every department except machinery. Before the strike, Gil LaPoint, "A" repairman, worked on the Cadillac motor job, which required an "A" classified repairman. After the strike LaPoint was replaced on that job by Charlie Poumb, a "B" repairman.

The workers returned to work on Monday (16 December 1985). Layoff notices were given to (1) Leo Kandow, (2) George Vesich, (3) Ray Young, (4) Charles Plumb, and (5) Carl Wessman (see G.C. Exh. 10). Anthony Kandow told Manager Spevetz he thought the layoff notices were a punitive action against the employees for participating in the union strike. Kandow also reminded Spevetz that layoff employees were not given a 5-day notice as required by the contract between the parties. Spevetz did not respond. After effectuation of the layoff, there were no union officials on the job at the Riverview plant.

On the next day, Tuesday (17 December 1985), Respondent issued a notice of temporary layoff to the employees laid off on Monday, 16 December, directing them to return to work the following Tuesday, 25 December. The Union filed a grievance with the Company and charges with the Board against Respondent, charging discrimination against employees for engaging in union activity (strike). Respondent offered to pay all of the laid-off employees for loss of work, if the Union would withdraw the charges, because Respondent acknowledged it made an error in their layoff notifications.

The same union executive board made a decision to strike 10 January 1986 under a continuing strike vote by the membership. All employees walked out at the end of the work shift, and the picket line consisted of Anthony Kandow, Gil LaPoint, and Leo Kandow. The strike lasted only for the weekend—that Saturday and Sunday. When the strikers returned Monday and entered the Riverview plant, Manager Carl Spevetz and Foreman Hudgins were by the timeclock stopping certain people from punching in and informing them that they were laid off.

In late January or February 1986, McCall, an inspection and test employee, was killed in the plant. Respondent called Dave Polezynski to replace him, and the Union grieved the replacement because Polezynski was low in seniority and other more senior persons should have been called, such as himself, Tom Umphenour, and Travis Wooten.

Analysis and Conclusions

The ultimate issues presented for determination are (1) whether Respondent's layoff and subsequent refusal to recall Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act; and (2) whether Respondent failed and refused to furnish the Union with information relevant and necessary to the Union's function as exclusive bargaining representative of Respondent's employees. The subordinate issues are (1) whether the Charging party employees have established a prima facie case that protected union activity by them was the determining factor in Respondent's layoff of them; and (2) if the evidence established a prima facie case that the union activities of the Charging Parties was a determining factor in their layoff, has Respondent demonstrated that the Charging Parties would have been laid off regardless of their union activities because of a legitimate business reason?

As to whether the Charging Parties have established a prima facie case that their protected strike activity was a determining factor in Respondent's layoff of them on 16 December, the record shows that the bargaining relationship between the parties has existed since 1939; that there have been many disputes between the parties regarding the Respondent's interpretation and application of the layoff provision in the national agreement; that many antiunion statements uttered during the period 1982–1985 have been attributed to management personnel and that Respondent knew Anthony Kandow and Gilbert LaPoint were very active and rather zealous union officers who filed or processed many grievances, and participated in prior strikes including the December one against Respondent.

In support of their allegations that Respondent manifested union animus toward its employees, Anthony Kandow testified that about 1982—1983, Foreman Ed Hastings told him that Plant Manager Brown complained that Anthony Kandow gets in his way because Kandow tries to run the business; then in or about 1982 Foreman Hendricks told Kandow and LaPoint that management was out to get them because of their union activities, and that management had a hit list and that the names of Anthony Kandow, LaPoint, and Leo Kandow were on it.

Gilbert LaPoint testified that Foreman Hendricks told him that he (Hendricks) was instructed by management to watch everything Kandow and LaPoint do, to try to document it when they come in late, to catch them in the act of doing something for which they could be disciplined; to put them under surveillance when they worked outside; and that Hendricks told him (LaPoint) that Labor Relations Representative Hooey generally referred to them (Kandow and LaPoint) in an obscene manner whenever union activities were discussed. Hooey appeared and testified in this proceeding, but she did not deny the conduct attributed to her.

Kandow further testified that in about 1983–1984, former Plant Manager Crane told him he was going to get him (Kandow), and when Kandow left his employment, Crane said he wanted him to know it was he (Crane) who got him; and that in about March 1984, Foreman Don Barnoff went around the shop urging employees not to vote for him (Kandow) for union president, telling them if Kandow won the election, the plant would close. LaPoint further testified that in or about 1984, Foreman Hudgins told him that he (LaPoint) was the most dangerous man in the shop because of his union activities, and that some scars had not healed from a prior union campaign when both Hudgins and Kandow were running for president in the bargaining unit; that after LaPoint filed a charge with the Board in 1985, because his rating had been reduced to "B" in violation of the Act, Foreman Hudgins told LaPoint he (LaPoint) was in trouble (inferentially) with management for filing the charge.

Also, during a grievance meeting in June 1986 regarding the recall of Anthony Kandow, LaPoint said Foreman Hudgins told him Anthony Kandow was not being recalled because he had some scars that had not healed from the time when he (Hudgins) was a bargaining unit employee, that he (Hudgins) had bitter disputes with Kandow and other employees, and that he has deep animosity for Kandow, whom he disliked and thought was a bad example for a union officer.

It is especially noted that neither former Company Foreman Hastings, Hendricks, Barnoff, nor Crane appeared and testified in this proceeding. Nevertheless, while I credit the somewhat negative statements about the Union or union activities attributed to Hastings, Hendricks, and Hooey, I do not attribute much weight to their statements because I find them too remote in time to have any significant bearing on the dispute between the parties in December 1985. Neither Hastings nor Hendricks was in Respondent's employ in December 1985. Also, I find some of the statements rather ambiguous and not sufficiently definitive to characterize as interfering with, restraining, or having a coercive effect on the protected union activity of the employees.

I credit the testimony of the undisputed statements attributed to former Plant Manager Crane and Foreman Barnoff by Kandow, not only because I was persuaded by his demeanor that he was testifying truthfully, but also because the statements were made more proximate in time to the strike in December 1985, were relatively consistent with antiunion statements attributed to management by other witneses, and therefore bore more relevance to the reasons Respondent laid off the Charging Parties. I credit the 1984 and 1985 statements attributed to Foreman Hudgins by LaPoint because I was persuaded by his demeanor that he was testifying truthfully, because Foreman Hudgins did not testify and no explanation was made for his nonappearance, and because the statements attributed to him were uttered more recently, and were therefore more relevant to Respondent's December 1985 layoff and refusal to recall the Charging Party employees.

I therefore find on the foregoing credited testimony that former Manager Crane's statement that he was going to get Kandow for his diligent union activities was a threat to fire Kandow and consequently evidenced an antiunion attitude. Similarly, Foreman Barnoff's conduct in urging employees to vote against Kandow for president, was conduct manifesting an antiunion attitude. Barnoff's telling employees that if Kandow won the election the plant would close was threatening conduct also manifesting union animus.

Likewise, Foreman Hudgins' telling LaPoint he was the most dangerous man in the shop because of his union activities, and telling him he was in a lot of trouble with management because he filed a charge with the Board, constituted union animus. All of these statements by management personnel (Crane, Barnoff, and Hudgins) were made either in 1984 or 1985, and were not too remote in time to have had significant relevance to Respondent's motive in laying off the Charging Parties in December 1985, thereafter refusing to call them. Moreover, I further find that the antiunion statements by management (Crane, Barnoff, and Hudgins) are consistent with the evidence of the abrupt manner in which the Charging Parties were laid off at the end of the strike and not recalled by Respondent, infra.

Consequently, when the union activism of Anthony Kandow and Gilbert LaPoint is considered along with the union animus manifested by Respondent's foremen (Crane, Barnoff, and Hudgins), the precipitous nature of the layoff (only a few hours after the Union notified the Respondent the strike had ended and the employees would return to work the next day), the fact that the layoffs were so precipitous that Respondent neglected to comply with the National Agreement's 5-day or 1 week's notice of layoff; and the reluctance and refusal of Respondent to recall the leading strike participants (Kandow, LaPoint, and Ash) to work, infra, it becomes abundantly clear that the Charging Parties have established a prima facie case that their union activities, including their participation in the December 1985 strike, were a determining factor in Respondent's reason for laying them off on 16 December.

I therefore conclude and find that the Charging Parties have established a prima facie case that their union activities were a determining factor for their layoff by the Respondent.

Respondent contends that Charging Parties would have been laid off even if they were not engaged in union activities.

In addressing the question whether the Charging Parties would have been laid off even if they were not engaged in union activities (including the December strike), the record shows that the parties had a long history of grievance disputes over Respondent laying off and recalling employees according to classification and seniority.

At the trial, management contended that in December 1985 it reviewed its manpower needs for the foreseeable future and decided it needed one less worker in each of three classifications (repair, inspection and test, and machinist).

Former Plant Manager McGivern testified that before December 1985, he had been pressured by Respondent to lay off employees, but he was reluctant to do so because of the approaching Christmas holidays, the usual yearend customer demands, the custom of senior employees taking unused paid leave during the holiday season, and the usual need for fill-in employees for employees on leave. However, McGivern said he learned that the shop was going to lose two jobs (two KWW generators for Rouge Steel and also repair of 600 hp motors for Wittar Steel Company), which were to arrive 18 and 22 December 1985, respectively. McGivern said he estimated the Rouge Steel job would take 72 hours, using two to four employees in welding and repair or winding work. It was difficult to estimate the time the Wittar job order would take until the motors were opened, but replacing bearings would be done in the repair department. He said when he learned the strike was over at 5 p.m. on 15 December 1985, he met with Manager Spevetz and Foreman Hudgins to discuss the layoffs. Foreman Hudgins recommended laying off Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash.

McGivern further stated that the Company decided to send the Rouge Steel job to its Cleveland, Ohio facility because it feared the employees might go back on strike. He admitted on cross-examination, however, that the employees had never struck near the Christmas holidays because they would lose two paid holidays. Nor had they ever returned to a strike immediately after a strike in the past. Thus, it was unlikely that they would have done so on this occasion.

Before the December 1985 strike, Respondent had always assured the Union that employees would be recalled from layoff whenever there was 40 hours or more work to be performed. However, several witnesses testified without dispute that after strikes in the past, there was generally an excess of work occasioned by the strike; that generally there was work in December occasioned by a number of senior employees taking unused paid leave during the Christmas season; that December 1985 was not different in this regard than prior December; that shop employees worked overtime until March 1986, and a slow period did not occur until April 1986; and that work picked up again in May 1986 when overtime resumed. Some of the latter overtime work is substantiated by the Respondent's overtime records (G.C. Exh. 7), revealing 188 hours of overtime work performed the last week in 1985.

In January 1986 an employee was killed in the shop, which highlighted some deficiencies in safety standards. In order to bring the shop in compliance with higher safety standards, Respondent had 360 hours of overtime general plant maintenance work performed in March 1986. Moreover, General Counsel's Exhibit 22 (a) shows that 150 hours of work out of classification was performed during the first half of May 1986. Also, in November to December 1986, Respondent had 300 hours of overtime general plant work performed in preparation for closing down the plant 31 December 1986. Much of such work was performed by employees junior to Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash. After their layoff in December 1985, Respondent transferred employees Dardini and Breathour from its Dearborn facility to the Riverview shop. Both of these employees had performed different work at the Dearborn facility. Nonetheless, Respondent's records (G.C. Exh. 29(c)) show that on 17 February 1986, Breathour's rating was changed from master inspection repair "A" to inspection and test "A." Respondent's records do not show when Dardini was given the rating inspection test "A." Authorization for the transfer of Breathour and Dardini to the Riverview shop is signed 14 February 1986, but the upper right-hand corner of the documents (G.C. Exhs. 29(a) and 31(a)) indicate they were prepared 16 December 1985, and it may be reasonably inferred that the latter date (16 December 1985) represents at least the date Respondent decided to transfer both employees from Dearborn to Riverview.[8]

I therefore conclude and find on the foregoing credited evidence that Respondent had sufficient work available, which could have been performed by recalling the Charging Party employees who participated in the December strike; but that Respondent elected to have such work performed by shop employees on overtime, and by transferring two employees from its Dearborn facility and accommodating their work skill classification to the work to be performed at Riverview during January–May 1986, as well as November and December 1986.

December Layoffs

Kandow

Former Foreman McGivern testified that Kandow was elected for layoff because the Pontiac job where he was working was cut to two employees, both of who had to be safety certified. Kandow did not hold a safety certificate so he could not be returned to the Pontiac job. Instead, he said two employees who were safety certified were assigned to the job because they had to work on energized equipment. Notwithstanding, on cross-examination, the undisputed evidence established that the safety certification work required less than 1 hour of work a day and only one person could perform it at a time. McGivern also acknowledged that in the past, George Gentiliuni, who is not safety certified, has worked on energized equipment. He said Kandow was also selected for layoff among test and repair employees because although two employees were his junior, Kandow was only a test "B" while the others were classification "A".

McGivern acknowledged on cross-examination that the Pontiac job on which Anthony Kandow and Gilbert LaPoint worked before the strike, commenced on 19 November 1985 and was not completed until 18 February 1986, which shows that the work was available during the period of time that the Charging Parties were laid off.

LaPoint

Former Foreman McGivern said Gilbert LaPoint was laid off because the shop retained four repair employees, three in class "A" and one in class "B," but all were senior to LaPoint. LaPoint was assembling motors when the strike ensued and according to LaPoint, there was at least 2 weeks' work left when they went on strike. LaPoint testified without dispute that before the strike he worked with Frank Gierack at the Cadillac Motor Company on an annual job that usually lasted 4 or 5 months. He was on this job a week before the strike when it was held up pending approval of a matter by the customer. Gierack and employee Plumb were assigned to that job after the strike, even though Plumb has only a "B" rating. In the past, Respondent has argued to keep junior [8] I credit the witnesses testifying on behalf of the Charging Parties that sufficient work was available after the December strike to recall strike employees, but that such work was performed by shop employees on overtime during December 1985–March, or May and late 1986. I credit the testimony of these witnesses not only because I was persuaded by their demeanor that they were telling the truth, but also because their version is substantiated by Respondent's work records, and partially corroborated and at least not disputed, by the testimony of Respondent's manager, McGivern, that overtime work was performed by shop employees during the above-stated months.

"A" employees and layoff "B" employees because of their ability.

Ash

McGivern also testified that machinist Roger Ash was selected for layoff although there were two machinists with less seniority, because Ash was a skilled welder and not a general purpose machinist. Welding was not needed but machinist were needed. He said Ash was not capable of doing the machine work and on prior occasions the Union had demanded that management lay him off because he was performing neither welding nor machining. However, other testimony in the record indicates that for several years prior to 6 December 1985 Respondent would lay off other employees in lieu of Ash because it said it needed Ash for his welding expertise and could not afford to lose him to other welding employment. Respondent did not show any reduction in welding work in or after December 1985.

Conclusions

In considering whether Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash would have been laid off 16 December 1985 absent any union activity (strike) by them, I am persuaded by the overwhelming credited and essentially uncontroverted circumstantial evidence of record that Respondent would not have laid them off 16 December 1985. Although Respondent has had a decline in business in the late 1970s and very early 1980s its business and employee complement stabilized with about 25 employees over the next 4 years prior to 16 December 1985. Respondent's testimony at the trial that it recently reviewed its work force in November or December 1985 and decided it needed one less employee in three different departments is supported only by the uncorroborated and self-serving testimony of Respondent's foreman, McGivern. However, even this contention would be credible if it were not for so many other contradictory circumstances, such as Respondent's need for fill-in employees during the approaching Christmas season, the transfer of the scheduled Rouge steel job to Respondent's Cleveland, Ohio facility, and Respondent's transfer of Breathour and Dardini from its Dearborn facility to the Riverview shop, when both employees were classified differently and had actually performed different work in Dearborn. I consider the timing of all these events occurring in mid-December 1985 too much to attribute to coincidence.

Additionally, when all of the above factors are considered along with the fact that Respondent had 300 and some hours of overtime work in late December and considerable overtime hours of work in January–March 1986, and also November–December 1986, and it did not recall either of the laid-off Charging Parties (Kandow, LaPoint, or Ash), I find that it may be reasonably inferred from the timing of these circumstances and the timing of the layoffs and Respondent's refusal to recall them, that Respondent would not have laid off Kandow, LaPoint, or Ash on 16 December 1985 if they were not engaged in the union strike 6–16 December 1985. This conclusion is further supported by the evidence that Respondent failed and refused to recall any of the three employees to work when it had general maintenance work that they could have performed during December 1985–May 1986. Consequently, I do not credit Respondent's business justification defense for not recalling Kandow, LaPoint, and Ash. The above conclusion is especially true when it is further considered that it was Formeman Hudgins, who selected Kandow, LaPoint, and Ash for layoff when he had previously manifested union animus toward Kandow and LaPoint. Hudgins knew Ash was one of the strikers and also a union official, and he saw Ash on the picket line. Specifically, in 1984 Foreman Hudgins told LaPoint that Anthony Kandow was the most dangerous man in the plant because of his union activities; that when LaPoint filed a charge with the Board in 1985, Hudgins told Kandow and LaPoint that LaPoint was in a lot of trouble with management; and that during a grievance meeting in February 1986 Hudgins told Leo Kandow he would love to recall Anthony Kandow and LaPoint to work but people on the floor were telling him Anthony and LaPoint were spending too much time on union business.

Respondent's posthearing brief to the counsel for Respondent alludes to the long bargaining history of the parties since 1939 and the many disputes they had over the interpretation and application of the layoff and recall policy (art. XII) of the national agreement. Counsel then argues that Respondent would not have waited until this late date to discriminate against the striking Charging Parties. However, as logical as this argument appears, when I review all the evidence of record, considering the decline in business of the Riverview shop and the numerous grievances filed by the Union, I am reminded that there is a first time for everything. The circumstances being what they were before 6 December 1985, it is not difficult to believe that Respondent was not aggravated by the numerous grievances and strike union activity of the Charging Parties to the extent that it tried to end the persistent and aggravating activity of the Union by laying off its most zealous leaders (the Charging Parties).

This conclusion is further supported when it is noted, and I find, that Respondent neglected to recall either of the Charging Party employees to perform available work, but instead transferred work to Cleveland, Ohio, transferred two employees from its Dearborn facility to the Riverview shop, and systematically worked other employees out of classification and order of seniority, as well as Respondent's failure and refusal to furnish the Union with necessary and relevant information requested by the Union, infra.

Although the evidence indicates that there was personal dissension between Kandow and Hudgins emanating from union office rivalry when Hudgins was a member of the bargaining unit, I also sense union animus by Hudgins aside from his personal relationship with Kandow. This is especially true when Hudgins vented some of his animus toward LaPoint, with whom the record does not show Hudgins had any personal conflict. Under these circumstances I find that Hudgins' union animus would probably have manifested itself independent of the personal conflict between himself and Kandow. In any event, Hudgins was no longer a member of the bargaining unit, but a member of management at the time he made his antiunion remarks to Anthony Kandow and Gilbert LaPoint, and also at the time of his 1986 antiunion explanation to Leo Kandow for not recalling Anthony Kandow and LaPoint (assertedly because unnamed employees in the shop told him Anthony spent too much time on union business).

Respondent also argues that in Kandow's affidavit to the Board in June 1986, he said he did not have any concrete evidence that he was laid off by the Respondent for his union activities, but during the trial he suggested a statement by Hudgins made during a second-step grievance constituted such evidence. Although Kandow did make the above statements, I do not conceive them as contradictory or untruthful, as the Respondent urges, because Kandow may not have remembered Hudgins' antiunion statement at the time he submitted his affidavit. It is also possible he was not asked whether he had such evidence, or his memory might have been thereafter jogged by additional questions of the General Counsel during the investigation in preparation of the case. Respondent's state of mind at the time it laid off the Charging Parties is determined on the record evidence as a whole, and not on isolated incidents on which inferences and speculation may be made. The Respondent's conduct subsequent to the layoffs (relative to recall) and refusal to furnish information, infra, is very much a part of the total evidence in determining its state of mind or attitude at the time of the layoffs and failure to recall the laid-off Charging Parties. Bartels & Shores Chemical Co., 274 NLRB 1034, 1040 (1985).

Finally since the evidence has clearly demonstrated that Respondent had considerable classified, general maintenance, and overtime work during December 1985–May 1986, and also November–December 1986, which Kandow, LaPoint, Ash, and nearly any of its skilled employees could have performed, and some did in fact perform I find that Respondent failed and refused to recall the Charging Party employees because of their union activities, including their participation in the December strike; that the December 1985 strike was an unfair labor practice strike protected under the Act; that the layoff and refusal to recall the Charging Parties in the order of seniority, work classification, and ability to perform would not have occurred if the employees were not engaged in union activity (strike); that Respondent has not established any credible business justification for laying off or refusing to recall them in the order of a consistently followed practice of the National Agreement; and that Respondent's layoff and refusal to recall the Charging Parties were based on the same reasons, their grievance union activity and engaging in the December strike, which were discriminatory acts by Respondent in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983); NLRB v. Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083, 1091 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981).

B. The Union's Request for Information

The Union had filed many grievances about employees either with less seniority and/or working out of their classification in March 1986, because Respondent was not recalling employees on layoff. In early 1986, employees Breathour and Dardini were transferred from the Dearborn to the Riverview facility. Their prior classifications were meter instruments "A," and they were given an "A" rating and assigned work in the inspection and gear department at Riverview, although the work they performed at Dearborn was different and unrelated to the work at Riverview. Prior to their transfers there had not been any such interchange of employees. The Union protested the transfers in view of the laid-off employees. Respondent said it had the right to transfer them because the meter instrument reading work previously performed by Breathour and Dardini was transferred elsewhere, and both employees had seniority over the laid-off employees. The Dearborn plant is still in operation with four or five employees.

Conclusion

It has been long held that an employer has a duty under the Act to supply, on request, such information that is probably relevant, in fact relevant, necessary, and useful to a union's effective and intelligent evaluation in determining whether to process employee grievances. NLRB v. Acme Industrial Co., 385 U.S. 438 (1967)

In the instant case, the evidence is uncontroverted that Respondent and the Union have had numerous grievance disputes over the years about employees working out of their classification or with less seniority. Such was the case in early March 1986 when Respondent transferred two employees from their meter instruments work in Dearborn to its Riverview facility, while employees from the Riverview facility were on layoff. Their Dearborn meter instruments "A" ratings were immediately changed to "A" ratings in inspection and test at the Riverview shop, and they were assigned inspection and test work.

In an effort to avoid discriminatory work assignments against employees in their proper classification after the 16 December 1985 strike, or against employees with more seniority, or employees on layoff, the Union in February 1986 verbally requested Respondent to furnish it with a list of all work from the date of the layoff (16 December 1985). Respondent said it "would look into that possibility." The Union periodically repeated its request in subsequent grievance meetings with Respondent until 9 July 1986, when it submitted the following written request to Respondent:

> The Union requests a list of all work performed by active shop employees since December 16, 1985 to date. This list should consist of descriptions of work performed, time spent on work performed, dates of work performed, and names of employees performing said work. Straight time hours, and overtime hours to be specified.
>
> The Union also requests a list of any work performed by outside employees, i.e. other G.E. shops, and any work farmed out to outside vendors, and any work performed in the plant by outside vendors during this period.

The above list criteria should also be included in this information.

The Union further requests, the company keep the local informed on a weekly basis, on the above information from date to Plant closing.

In a letter signed by Carl Spevetz (manager) dated 23 July 1986, Respondent replied as follows:

This is in reply to your request on July 9, 1987, of certain information.

1. Without some further elaboration from you, the Company is unable to determine that all or any of the information requested is relevant to any outstanding issues (i.e., grievances which are still in the grievance procedure or issues which are the subject of current or proposed negotiations). If you will identify what items of information you believe are relevant to what the outstanding issues are, the Company will give further consideration to your request.

2. Your request asks for lists or other compilations of information. Such a compilation would involve considerable cost and administrative burden to the Company. Therefore, if the Company determines that any request for information are relevant to any outstanding issues, the Company may allow the Union the opportunity to review relevant and existing Company records. If the Union desires to make copies of such records, the Company may impose a reasonable charge for the use of its copying facilities.

If you wish to discuss any aspect of this letter, please contact me.

In a letter dated 5 August 1986 the Union responded to Respondent's 23 July 1986 letter as follows:

The information requested on 7/9/86, is necessary to pursue the N.L.R.B. charges filed in regards to the strike in 1985, which concluded on December 16, 1985, and the Co's, subsequent lock out of certain employees, Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash.

The Co's, position that said lock out was due to a lack of work, does not coincide with some of the information, the Local has received from other sources during the period. Some of the instances have been documented in grievance form.

The union requests the information, to determine if the Co's, position 'That there is not enough full time work available, to justify recalling employees,' is valid.

We expect the Co. to make this information available to the Local in a timely manner.

The undisputed and credited testimony of record further established that Respondent's labor relations representative, Marie Hooey, sat in on grievances for the Respondent. She told the Union whenever junior employees worked out of their classification, there was always less than 40 hours of work to be done, and Respondent did not recall laid-off employees for such work. However, when the Union presented Respondent with documentary evidence of more that 40 hours worked in one grievance, laid-off employee Gary Besonen was recalled to work.

Because the dispute between the parties after the December 1985 strike involved availability of work (classified and general maintenance) to recall laid-off employees on the basis of seniority, their classification and ability to perform such work, the Union's February 1986 verbal request for a list of all work performed after 16 December 1985 was clearly relevant and necessary to the Union's obligation to process grievances for evaluation, and to determine whether there was any discrimination in the assignment of classified work to junior employees, or employees out of their work classification. Likewise, the Union's written request for a list of the description of all such work, the time spent in performing it, the date it was performed, the names of the employees performing such work, work performed outside the shop or farmed out to vendors, and the number of straight-time and overtime hours during which the work was performed, is clearly relevant and necessary for the Union's evaluation and determination whether laid-off employees were discriminated against regarding recall, or whether employees working were discriminated against in the assignment work in accordance with their classification and order of seniority.

It is abundantly clear from the above-described nature of the dispute between the parties that the information requested by the Union was not only relevant, necessary, and useful for the Union's evaluation and determination regarding whether Respondent was discriminating in assigning available work to junior employees or employees out of classification, rather than recalling the laid-off employees to perform such work. Consequently, I find that all of the information requested by the Union was relevant, necessary, and useful to the Union in its representative function of the unit employees in investigating and processing grievances. NLRB v. Acme Industrial Co., supra; Florida Steel Corp., 235 NLRB 941, 942 (1978), enfd. 101 LRRM 2671, 2674 (4th Cir. 1979), and Anheuser Busch, Inc., 237 NLRB 982, 984–985 (1978).

Although Respondent's letter of 23 July 1986 to the Union requested the Union to elaborate on its requests in order for Respondent to determine whether the Union's request was irrelevant to any grievance issues pending; and that compliance with the Union's request would be a burden on Respondent at considerable costs, I find Respondent's request is without merit. The Union's verbal request of February 1986, and especially its more specific written request of 9 July 1986, were both sufficiently explicit for Respondent to understand and recognize its relevance to the recall of the laid-off employees. After all, Respondent was not a stranger to the layoff dispute, or to the long-standing occurrence of disputes arising out of work assignments out of classifications or without conflict in employee seniority or ability to perform work. But even if there were some merit in Respondent's request for elaboration by the Union on its request, I find that the Union furnished Respondent with additional specificity of its request in its 5 August 1986 reply to Respondent, even though, I further find such a reply was cumulative and unnecessary.

Consequently, I find on the foregoing documentary evidence and reasons that although Respondent untimely furnished the requested information to the Union 1 year and 3 months after its verbal request and 10 months after its written request, that its action was a dilatory and unreasonable delay by Respondent, consistent with its oral and written responses to the Union (it "would look into that possibility," and its unnecessary request for further clarification). I find that such delay constituted a failure and refusal by Respondent to furnish the requested information. I further find that Respondent's failure and refusal to furnish the requested information constituted a failure and refusal to bargain in good faith, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149, 153–154 (1956).

Article XXIX, p. 95 (G.C. Exh. 3) of the nationally negotiated agreement between the parties contains the following management rights clause:

> Management Authority
>
> The Union and the locals recognize that subject only to the expressed provisions of this Agreement, the supervision, management and control of the Company's business, operations and plants are exclusively the function of the Company.

Article XII of the agreement, p. 44, provides in part as follows:

> Reduction or Increase in Forces
>
> 1. (a) In all cases of layoff or transfer due to lack of work, total length of continuous service shall be the major factor determining the employees to be laid off or transferred (exclusively of upgrading). However, ability will be given consideration.
>
> (b) Similarly, in all cases of rehiring after layoff, such total length of continuous service shall be the major factor determining such rehiring if the employee is able to do the available work in a satisfactory manner after a minimum amount of training.

Counsel for Respondent cites the management rights clause and the reduction or increase in work force provisions of the national agreement. It is not shown, however, how these provisions apply to the facts in the instant case. In my judgement, the management rights clause has not been placed in issue by the evidence, and although I find the reduction in work force provision not entirely precise, I find that it was not uniformly applied in the instant case. Although provisions (a) and (b) clearly state that total length of continuous service shall be a major determining factor for recall, it is particularly noted that Charging Party Gilbert LaPoint was in Respondent's employ for 30 years. Apparently, the length of continuous service provision was not given consideration for recall in his case. It is therefore clear from this example, and the selective exclusion of recalling the striking union officers, that Respondent was not indiscriminately recalling employees after the December 1985 strike.

Remedy

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I will recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and that it take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent laid off and refused to recall employees who participated in protected union activity, including a strike, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act; and that by failing and refusing to timely furnish the Union with necessary and relevant information requested by the Union, Respondent also violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, the recommended Order will provide that Respondent cease and desist from engaging in such unlawful conduct; that it be ordered to recognize and on request, bargain in good faith with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit; that it furnish the Union with the information requested by the Union; and that it make whole the three unit employees for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of their discriminatory layoff, and Respondent's discriminatory failure and refusal to recall them, within the meaning and in accord with the Board's Decision in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987),[3] except as specifically modified by the wording of such recommended Order.

Because of the character of the unfair labor practices herein found, the recommended Order will provide that Respondent cease and desist from, in any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act. NLRB v. Entwistle Mfg. Co., 120 F.2d 532, 536 (4th Cir. 1941).

Conclusion of Law

1. By the following acts and conduct the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

(a) Discriminatorily laying off employees Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash, and failing and refusing to recall them because they, as union officers, engaged in protected grievance filing union activity, including their participation in a strike.

(b) By failing and refusing to furnish the Union with necessary and relevant information requested by the Union, Respondent has failed and refused to bargain in good faith with the Union.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[4]

---

[3] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[4] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ORDER

The Respondent, General Electric Company, Riverview, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Laying off and failing and refusing to recall employees because they engaged in protected union activity, including a strike.

(b) Failing and refusing to furnish the Union with necessary and relevant information requested by the Union.

(c) Refusing to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to recall Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash for immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions as of 16 December 1985 or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges.

(b) Make whole Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash, from 16 December 1985, for any losses they have suffered as a result of their layoff because of their union activity, including participating in a strike.

(c) Offer to bargain, or on request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of the unit employees.

(d) Furnish the Union with the information it requested.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(f) Post at Respondent's Riverview facility, located at 18075 Krause Avenue, Riverview, Michigan, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[5] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately on receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(g) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[5] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
>
> To form, join, or assist any union
>
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing
>
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
>
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to bargain in good faith with the Union by failing an refusing to supply information requested by the Union.

WE WILL NOT discriminate against our employees in regard to hire or tenure of employment, or term or condition of employment to discourage membership in, assistance to, or any other activity on behalf of the Union or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of our employees in the appropriate unit described below:

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its Riverview, Michigan facility; but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitutes a unit appropriate for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

WE WILL recall and offer Anthony Kandow, Gilbert LaPoint, and Roger Ash immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions as of 16 December 1985 or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay suffered by reason of our discrimination against them, with interest.

All our employees are free to become or remain, or refuse to become or remain, members of Local 947, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE), or any other labor organization.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

Eagle Aviation, Inc., and Executive Air Terminal, Inc. and Chauffeurs, Teamsters and Helpers Local Union No. 175, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO,[1] Petitioner. Case 9–RC–15151

September 20, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On July 17, 1987, the Regional Director issued a Decision and Direction of Election in which he found that assertion of jurisdiction was warranted. On August 13, 1987, the National Labor Relations Board granted the Employers' request for review of that decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

On the entire record in the case, the Board finds:

Executive Air Terminal, Inc. is a West Virginia corporation engaged in the service and maintenance of aircraft and furnishes aircraft fueling and storage services at the Yeager Airport in Charleston, West Virginia. It also operates an air taxi and charter service and provides flight training. Executive Air Terminal, Inc.'s gross revenues exceed $500,000 annually, and its direct out-of-state purchases exceed $50,000 annually.

Eagle Aviation, Inc. is a West Virginia corporation engaged in the service and maintenance of aircraft at the Yeager Airport. It furnishes fueling and storage services and maintains and repairs aircraft.

The Employers contend that jurisdiction over their operations should be with the National Mediation Board under the Railway Labor Act. The Petitioner, on the other hand, contends that jurisdiction is properly with the National Labor Relations Board.

Section 2(2) of the National Labor Relations Act provides in pertinent part that the term "employer" as used in the National Labor Relations Act should exclude any person subject to the Railway Labor Act.

Accordingly, because of the nature of the jurisdictional question, we requested the National Mediation Board to study the record in this case and to determine the applicability of the Railway Labor Act to Executive Air Terminal, Inc. and Eagle Aviation, Inc. In reply we were advised by the National Mediation Board that it had concluded as follows:

> First, with regard to Executive [Air Terminal, Inc.], air taxi and charter operations engaged in interstate common carriage are subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Labor Act. . . . In addition, Executive's provision of fueling to common carriers is also a function which is traditionally performed by employees in the airline industry. The Board, therefore, finds that Executive Air Terminal and its employees are subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Labor Act.
>
> Turning to Eagle Aviation, the Board finds that Eagle's employees, like those of Executive, perform work which is traditionally performed by employees in the airline industry. . . . [T]he record reveals that there is a significant degree of control exercised over Eagle employees by Executive employees. . . . The Board, therefore, finds that Eagle Aviation and its employees are also subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Labor Act.[2]

In view of the foregoing, we shall dismiss the petition.

ORDER

It is ordered that the petition in Case 9–RC–15151 is dismissed.

[1] On November 1, 1987, the Teamsters International Union was readmitted to the AFL–CIO. Accordingly, the caption has been amended to reflect that change.

[2] Eagle Aviation, 15 NMB 285, 287–288 (1988).

Milwhite Company, Inc. and Eddie Lowery. Case 10–CA–23256

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On June 30, 1988, Administrative Law Judge J. Pargen Robertson issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Milwhite Company, Inc., Attapulgus, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

Gaye Nell Hymon, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Ralph C. Smith, Jr., Esq. (Smith, Perry & Epps), of Bainbridge, Georgia, for the Respondent.
Eddie Lowery, of Albany, Georgia, Staff Representative.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

J. PARGEN ROBERTSON, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard in Bainbridge, Georgia, on 3 June 1988 pursuant to a complaint that issued on 21 April 1988, alleging that Respondent engaged in conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

The issue presented is whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing to negotiate with its employees' bargaining representative in the presence of two members of the Union's negotiating committee. One of those two, the president of the Union, is an employee of a business competitor of Respondent. The other objectionable committee member is an employee of Respondent whose involvement in negotiations would, according to Respondent, seriously interfere with Respondent's production.

Respondent admitted complaint allegations regarding the charge; that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act; that United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC, Local Union 170–02 is a labor organization (Union); that the Union is, and has been, the exclusive representative of the employees in a described production and maintenance bargaining unit at Respondent's Attaplugus, Georgia facility since about 1963; that it and the Union have been parties to successive bargaining agreements since 1963; and that the Union requested Respondent to bargain collectively on 29 January 1988.

The complaint alleges that Respondent refused to bargain on 5 and 10 February 1988. Respondent in its answer alleged:

> Respondent denies that it refuses and continues to refuse to bargain collectively in good faith with the Union, but admits that Respondent refuses to bargain with a Committee which includes James Mitchell an employee of a competitor in the local area, and Raymond Anderson, an employee of Respondent because of the detrimental effect his inclusion on the Committee would cause to the Company's production.

Respondent's plant manager, Morey White, testified that Respondent has two competitors in the area of its facility, Flordine Company in Quincy, Florida, and Engelhard Corporation in Attapulgus, Georgia. According to White all three companies compete in business and in recruiting employees because they all engage in the mining of the same product—Attapulgite Clay.

According to White, Respondent has consistently resisted bargaining when the Union wished to include on its bargaining committee an employee or employees of one of its competitors. From 1963 until 1988 the Union had agreed not to include an employee of a competitor on its bargaining committee. Morey White described Respondent's basis for resisting a competitor employee on the union committee:

> Because of the real stiff competition. I'm sure that we have, are trying to develop products and they are too, specialty products to upgrade the quality of our material in order to keep our customers. And we feel like a competitior sitting in, things come out in negotiations that, you know, we don't particularly want our competitor to know about.

James Mitchell has been president of the Union for 9 years. During that time—in fact for the last 14 years—Mitchell has been a rank-in-file employee of Engelhard Corporation—one of Respondent's two competitors. Mitchell testified that he was elected by the union membership to serve as chairman on the 1988 bargaining committee.

As to Raymond Anderson, who was elected to the 1988 negotiating committee when the Union realized that none of the employee representatives on that committee were in Anderson's division at Respondent's facility—Morey White testified that Anderson is one of two bulldozer operators at Respondent's facility, that the bulldozer operators remove the overburden from the clay and that Anderson's absence from work would throw about 50 percent of the production employees with no work to perform (i.e., the production employees' work depends on the bulldozer operators remaining ahead of them in removing the overburden). Respondent contends that it could not afford to have Anderson out of work.

When the Union on 13 April 1988 offered to bargain during nonwork periods, Respondent contended that long bargaining sessions would likely result in Anderson not being able to perform his work in an acceptable fashion the next workday. Respondent continued to refuse to negotiate with Anderson present in negotiations.

Conclusions

The general rule in this area finds its genesis in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act:

> Employees shall have the right to . . . bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

The Second Circuit, United States Court of Appeals, recognized employees' right to select their own representatives, in the following language:

> Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 157, guarantees certain rights to employees, including the right to join together in labor organizations and "to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing." This right of employees and the corresponding right of employers, see section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act, 29 U.S.C. § 158 (b)(1)(B), to choose whomever they wish to represent them in formal labor negotiations is fundamental to the statutory scheme. In general, either side can choose as it sees fit and neither can control the other's selection, a proposition confirmed in a number of opinions, some of fairly ancient vintage. For example, the following asserted objections to bargaining representatives have all been rejected as defenses to charges of refusal to bargain: that a local union president could not act for the international union in grievance handling, see Prudential Insurance Co. of America v. NLRB, 278 F.2d 181, 182–183 (3d Cir. 1960); that an AFL "general organizer," not a member or officer of the union, could not bargain for the latter, see NLRB v. Deena Artware, Inc., 198 F.2d 645, 650–651 (6th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 906, 73 S.Ct. 644, 97 L.Ed. 1342 (1953); that employees could not be represented by a local union, a majority of whose members were employed by a rival industry and which the employees were not eligible to join, see Pueblo Gas & Fuel Co. v. NLRB, 118 F.2d 304, 307–308 (10th Cir. 1941); and that an international union representative could not negotiate for a local, see Oliver Corp., 74 NLRB 483 (1947). [General Electric Company v. NLRB, 412 F.2d 512, 516, 517 (2d Cir. 1969).]

However, as set out by the Fourth Circuit, the employees' right is not absolute:

> At the outset, we note that section 7 of the Act, 29 U.S.C. § 157, guarantees employees the right 'to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. . . .' While the Supreme Court has recognized this right as fundamental to the statutory scheme, NLRB v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 33, 57 S.Ct. 615, 622, 81 L.Ed. 893 (1937), it is not absolute; the employer may refuse to negotiate with the union bargaining committee if he can carry the heavy burden of showing that the selected representatives present a clear and present danger to the collective bargaining process. IBEW v. NLRB, 557 F.2d 995, 998 (2d Cir. 1977); NLRB v. David Butterick Co., 399 F.2d 505, 507 (1st Cir. 1968); Harley Davidson Motor Co., 214 N.L.R.B. 433 (1974). This rule requires the employer to show exceptional circumstances—such as bad faith or ulterior motive—underlying the union's choice of its bargaining team members. Mere inclusion of persons outside the negotiating unit does not constitute exceptional circumstances. Indiana & Michigan Electric, 599 F.2d 185 (other units); Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. NLRB, 415 F.2d 174, 177–78 (8th Cir. 1969) (other locals); General Electric Co. v. NLRB, 412 F.2d 512, 517–20 (2d Cir. 1969) (other international unions); Standard Oil Co. v. NLRB, 322 F.2d 40, 44 (6th Cir. 1963) (other locals). Further, the employer's claim that the union's use of outsiders is an unlawful attempt to compel companywide or multiplant bargaining also is insufficient unless the employer can demonstrate that the union actually attempted to bargain outside unit boundaries. Indiana & Michigan Electric, 599 F.2d at 191; Minnesota Mining, 415 F.2d at 178; General Eelctric, 412 F.2d at 519–20. [Procter & Gamble Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, 658 F.2d 968, 976, 977 (4th Cir. 1981).]

Therefore, the question is whether the members selection of James Mitchell and Raymond Anderson presented a "clear and present danger to the collective bargaining process" or, as the Board has held in subsequent cases, whether the evidence shows that the presence of the other party would create ill will and make bargaining impossible.

Respondent argued that it was necessary for the General Counsel to prove that it acted without animus in refusing to negotiate. The cases cited by Respondent are inapposite to an 8(a)(5) allegation. None of the cases dealing with an issue similar to the instant case concerns itself with whether the Employer was motivated because of union animus.

This case presents a question, inter alia, of whether Respondent directly interfered with its employees' Section 7 rights. If proven, that act alone constitutes a violation and it is not necessary to question Respondent's motive.

While "motive" is a matter of concern, it is of concern only in determining whether Respondent's motivation was backed by evidence showing the existence of "clear and present danger" or "ill will."

As to James Mitchell, at first blush Respondent's concern appears reasonable.

However, the hearing revealed consideration beyond the initial reaction stages. The testimony of Morey White appeared to raise two areas of concern by Respondent. (1) White felt he could not negotiate in good faith with

James Mitchel present;[1] and (2) matters would surely arise during negotiations that Respondent would not wish to reveal to its business competitors.[2]

Both the above concerns are significant. However, neither survived the hearing as substantial obstacles to bargaining.

Although White felt he could not negotiate in good faith with Mitchell present, he was unable to articulate a sound basis for his discomfort other than to show concern for confidential knowledge. Moreover, White's testimony did not show that, whatever his concerns, those concerns could not have been resolved through discussion with the Union.

As to his concern with confidential knowledge, Respondent admitted that it fully expected the bargaining committee of the Union to discuss all matters that arose in negotiations with the union president. What Respondent feared was the union president getting information first hand while being present during negotiations.

In view of the testimony, it is apparent that Respondent's asserted basis to not negotiate in the presence of committee chairman and President James Mitchell does not present clear and present danger to the negotiating process.

Perhaps issues concerning confidential information will arise during negotiation. However, there has been no showing that the parties could not handle such problems during negotiations and, in any event, Respondent illustrated that it had no concern with the Union discussing whatever it learned during negotiations with the union president. That testimony reveals that Respondent's concern with confidentiality is merely a surface reaction without there existing true and substantial danger. The mere fear that negotiations will result in compromising confidentiality is insufficient. See General Electric Co., 173 NLRB 253, 255 (1968).

As to the question of ill will, Respondent admitted that it has nothing personally against either James Mitchell or Raymond Anderson. Only their particular positions make their presence in negotiations objectionable. Therefore, the record fails to show the existence of ill will that would make bargaining impossible. Fitzsimmons Mfg. Co., 251 NLRB 375 (1980).

I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing to negotiate with a committee that included Union President James Mitchell. Missouri Portland Cement Co., 284 NLRB 432 (1987); Colfor Inc., 282 NLRB 1173 (1987); Independent Drug Store Owners of Santa Clara County, 170 NLRB 1699 (1968).

Regarding Raymond Anderson, Respondent demonstrated an unwillingness to negotiate with Anderson present as a member of the Union's negotiations committee, regardless of the Union's expression that it would meet during nonworking times if Respondent desired. In Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 229 NLRB 576 (1977), the Board had occasion to consider a similar question:

> The General Counsel alleged that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by (1) refusing to meet with the union representatives ouside working hours, and by (2) simultaneously refusing to allow members of the bargaining committee leave without pay to travel to and participate in negotiations with respect to units in which they are not employed. The Respondent defended its actions principally on the theory that at least one "traveler" and member of the committee, VanAman, was a troubleshooter whose presence could not be spared for the aggregate of 11 days requested to participate in these negotiations. The alleged violation was not pinned to one or the other of the Respondent's actions, but resulted from the application of both actions together, which effectively deprived the Union of the assistance of the bargaining representatives it desired. We find that the Respondent's refusal to grant members of the Union's negotiation committee uncompensated leave to permit them to engage in bargaining during working hours, while at the same time refusing the Union's request to bargain during nonworking hours, is an unlawful interference with the Union's selection of its bargaining representatives.
>
> We do not suggest that an employer is compelled to yield to a union's request for negotiations outside normal business hours. It is free to insist on bargaining during the working day, if it prefers, as the Respondent did here. If it makes this choice, however, it cannot at the same time refuse to allow unpaid time off to union representatives on the bargaining committee because they are employed in another unit. Alternatively, the Employer is free to acquiesce in the Union's request to bargain during nonworking hours in order to reduce the amount of uncompensated leave for travelers and to minimize the effects of the unavailability during their regular working hours of emergency troubleshooters.
>
> However, the Respondent cannot have it both ways. That is, if, as here, the Respondent makes the choice to bargain during the working day, it cannot lawfully refuse to allow union employee representatives time off. But, if it does refuse to give such employees time off, then it is obligated to make itself available for negotiations at a time—even outside working hours—when the representatives can attend. It is the Respondent's attempt here to have it both ways that constitutes the violation of the Act.

If, as here, an employer is concerned with loss of an employee's services because of the employee's presence at negotiations, there exist a possibility that the employer may insist on a reasonable alternative. However, the employer may not simply refuse to negotiate on the grounds that a valuable employee is included on the negotiating committee. Here, the Union attempted to reconcile the Respondent's problem with the loss of Ander-

[1] When asked what effect inclusion of a competitor on the committee would have, Morey White testified, "I don't feel like I could bargain in good faith."

[2] As shown above, Morey White testified that Respondent historically resisted inclusion on the Union's bargaining committee of employees of competitors because "we feel like that a competitor sitting in, things come out in negotiations that, you know, we don't particularly want our competitors to know about."

son's services as one of its two bulldozer operators, by offering to meet and negotiate during nonwork times.

As noted above, the Respondent cannot have it both ways. It cannot refuse to meet both during work and nonwork times on its assertions that it cannot afford to lose Anderson during work.

Respondent's argument that negotiations would interfere with production if Anderson is present regardless of whether the negotiations occurred during work or nonwork times is unreasonable. I find that Respondent also engaged in 8(a)(5) and (1) conduct by refusing to bargain while Anderson is present as a member of the Union's negotiation committee.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Milwhite Company, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC, Local Union 170–02 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. By refusing to bargain collectively with United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC, Local Union 170–02 because of the presence at bargaining of James Mitchell and Raymond Anderson, Respondent has engaged in conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.
4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[3]

ORDER

The Respondent, Milwhite Company, Inc., Attapulgus, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) On request from the Union continuing to refuse to meet and negotiate a collective-bargaining agreement even though the Union's negotiation committee may include James Mitchell and/or Raymond Anderson.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request meet and negotiate with the Union even though the Union may, at its election include James Mitchell and/or Raymond Anderson on its bargaining committee, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the appropriate unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its facility in Attapulgus, Georgia excluding all clerical, technical and laboratory employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Post at its Attapulgus, Georgia facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 10, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[3] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[4] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
> To form, join, or assist any union
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to meet and negotiate in good faith with designated representatives of United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC, Local Union 170–02 as exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the following appropriate bargaining unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its facility in Attapulgus, Georgia excluding all clerical, technical and laboratory employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, meet and negotiate in good faith with designated representatives of the Union including, if the union desires, James Mitchell and/or Raymond Anderson.

MILWHITE COMPANY, INC.

Local No. 6–18, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC and Wisconsin Gas Company. Case 30–CE–23

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On a charge filed by the Employer on June 16, 1987, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint against Local No. 6–18, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, the Respondent, alleging that it had violated Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act by entering into and maintaining an illegal "union signatory" clause in its collective-bargaining agreement with the Employer. The Respondent admitted the factual allegations contained in the complaint while denying the unlawfulness of the allegations.

Thereafter, the General Counsel filed with the Board in Washington, D.C., a Motion for Summary Judgment. On January 20, 1988, the Board issued an Order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Respondent filed a response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

We will grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment for the reasons stated below.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Employer, a corporation with an office and place of business in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is a public utility furnishing natural gas services with annual gross revenues in excess of $250,000, and with annual purchases of products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000, which it received at its facility directly from points located outside the State of Wisconsin.

We find that the Employer is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. We further find that the Respondent is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

The following facts are undisputed. The Respondent and the Employer have had a collective-bargaining relationship for approximately 30 years. The most recent agreement is effective for the period June 1, 1986, through May 31, 1989. Article 2, section 7, paragraph (d) states

> Whenever the Company shall contract work normally performed by employees in the Production and Maintenance Units, the work so contracted shall be done by Union labor.

On March 9, 1987, the Respondent filed and commenced processing its grievance number 3–87–9 alleging a violation of the specified clause of the labor agreement. The grievance specifically stated:

> On 3/9/87 you violated 6-18 contract by hiring non-union contractor for locating. We want this stopped immediately and for all hours worked by the contractor we want our locator payed [sic] 1-1/2 times there [sic] wages.

The General Counsel alleges that the specified clause is violative of Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act on its face, and that the Respondent's filing of the pertinent grievance reaffirmed this illegal clause within the 10(b) period. The Respondent alleges that the specified clause is a lawful work-preservation clause that will be demonstrated by an examination of all the surrounding circumstances during an evidentiary hearing.

Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act states in pertinent part:

> It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to . . . cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforceable and void . . . .

The Board has routinely interpreted this section so as not to ban contracts that are intended to preserve, for the employees within the bargaining unit, work that they have traditionally performed.[1] Nevertheless, we agree with the General Counsel that the clause at issue here is facially invalid. It clearly does more than protect or preserve traditional bargaining-unit work for bargaining-unit employees. It does not prohibit the Employer from subcontracting work that its own employees perform. And it does not limit such subcontracting to employers who, regardless of their bargaining relationship with unions, pay their employees wages and fringe benefits commensurate with those of the Respondent's labor agreement. Rather the clause permits subcontracting, but only to those employers who have labor agreements with unions. It therefore evinces neither a valid work preservation nor a valid union standards requirement objective. Instead, the clause precludes the Employer from doing business with any other employer who does not have a labor agreement with a union. It is, therefore, a classic union-signatory clause and clearly contravenes Section 8(e).[2]

[1] Painters Orange Belt District Council 48 (Maloney Specialties), 276 NLRB 1372, 1387 (1985); Mine Workers (Bituminous Coal), 144 NLRB 228, 234 (1963).

We also agree with the General Counsel that the Respondent's filing of the grievance pursuant to the illegal clause constitutes entering into the unlawful provision within the 10(b) period.[3]

Because the language of the clause itself reveals an object other than work preservation, we conclude, contrary to the Repsondent's contention, that there is no need for a hearing and that the General Counsel is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Accordingly, we grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Wisconsin Gas Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondent Local No. 6–18, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Article 2, section 7, paragraph (d) of the collective-bargaining agreement between the Respondent and the Employer violates Section 8(e) of the Act.

4. By filing and commencing to process a grievance pursuant to article 2, section 7, paragraph (d) of the collective-bargaining agreement, Respondent entered into an agreement in violation of Section 8(e) of the Act.

5. The above unfair labor practice is an unfair labor practice affecting commerce and the free flow of commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[2] Machinists Local 9 (St. Louis Automotive), 134 NLRB 1354, 1358 (1961), enfd. 315 F.2d 33 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

[3] Mine Workers Local 2428 (Garland Coal), 258 NLRB 56, 58 (1981), enfd. 727 F.2d 954 (10th Cir. 1984).

ORDER

The Respondent, Local No. 6–18, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Maintaining, enforcing, or giving effect to article 2, section 7, paragraph (d) of the 1986–1989 labor agreement.

(b) In any like or related manner violating Section 8(e) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at its business office and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 30, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Furnish the Regional Director for Region 30 sufficient signed copies of the attached notice that the Regional Director may furnish to Wisconsin Gas Company for posting, should the Company be willing, in places where notices to employees are customarily posted.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[4] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT maintain, enforce, or give effect to article 2, section 7, paragraph (d) of our 1986–1989 labor agreement with Wisconsin Gas Company.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related matter violate Section 8(e) of the Act.

LOCAL NO. 6-18, OIL, CHEMICAL AND ATOMIC WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION, AFL-CIO-CLC

Gulf Oil Company and Gary Offenburg, Sr. and Norman Kamann and Jacquelyn Obergon and Glenn Eversole and Walter Eckhart and Robert F. Carsten. Cases 8–CA–13895–1, 8–CA–13895–2, 8–CA–13895–3, 8–CA–13895–4, 8–CA–13895–5, and 8–CA–13895–6

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On December 30, 1982, Administrative Law Judge Benjamin Schlesinger issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.[1]

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

Since 1950 OCAW Local 7-346 (the Union) has represented certain hourly paid employees at the Respondent's Toledo, Ohio refinery. The most recent collective-bargaining agreement was effective from January 8, 1979, to January 7, 1981. The agreement provided that negotiations could be reopened on certain economic items (not involved here) if the Union gave timely notice. It also preserved the Union's right to strike no earlier than January 8, 1980,[2] if the parties failed to reach agreement on the reopened items. The Union invoked the reopener, agreement was not reached by January 8, and the Union began a lawful economic strike at 4 p.m. on that date. The Respondent thereupon suspended, because of the strike and for its duration, payment of sickness and accident (S & A) benefits to five disabled employees who had been receiving them at the time the strike began and for a sixth otherwise eligible employee who entered the hospital on January 8, 1980, but before the 4 p.m. strike commencement. On April 14[3] the Respondent and the Union settled the strike and executed a letter of agreement and a separate return to work agreement and understanding. Pursuant to the agreements, the Union withdrew an unfair labor practice charge filed concerning the denial of S & A benefits. On June 5 and 6, the Charging Parties individually filed the charges that led to the instant complaint.

The judge concluded that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by withholding benefits under its S & A plan from the six disabled employees during the strike for the periods in which they were otherwise eligible for the benefits.[4] We agree with many of the judge's findings underlying this conclusion for the reasons set forth in section I, below. However, we shall dismiss the complaint based on our further finding, contrary to that of the judge, that the settlement agreement constituted an effective waiver by the Union of the affected employees' entitlements to the S & A benefits at issue. The fact and analysis supporting the dismissal are set forth in section II of this Decision and Order.

I.

The judge found no merit in the Respondent's contentions that benefits provided for the S & A plan were not accrued benefits and that neither a specific provision in the collective-bargaining agreement nor past practice under similar or identical provisions in earlier contracts entitled it to suspend S & A benefits to the six Charging Parties because they were "striking employees." In doing so, the judge relied on the Emerson Electric Co.[5] "coercive effects" theory as reaffirmed in Conoco, Inc.[6] and on the Conoco holding, which reversed the Emerson Electric "remedial limitation." (In Conoco, the Board held that even if disabled employees supported or participated in a lawful strike their employer could not eliminate or limit their entitlement to reimbursement for accrued S & A benefits simply because of the strike.) In agreeing with these findings of the judge we rely on Texaco, Inc., 285 NLRB 241 (1987), which issued subse-

[1] The Respondent has requested oral argument. The request is denied as the record, exceptions, and briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[2] All dates are in 1980 unless otherwise specified.

[3] The judge inadvertently referred to the settlement date as April 8.

[4] We agree with the judge's finding that the Board's jurisdiction in this proceeding is not preempted by the Employee Retirement Income Act of 1974 (ERISA), Pub. L. 93–406, 88 Stat. 829 (codified as amended), 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. The Respondent cites secs. 502(e)(1) and 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA, which provide that state and Federal courts exercise concurrent jurisdiction over claims by a participant in an ERISA-covered plan—such as the sickness and accident plan in issue here—"to recover benefits due to him under the terms of the plan, or to clarify his rights to future benefits under the terms of the plan." However, sec. 514(d) of ERISA further states that "[N]othing in this title shall be construed to alter, amend, modify, invalidate, impair or supersede any law of the United States . . . or any rule or regulation issued under any such law." (Emphasis added.) Indeed, as the Supreme Court recently held, after a collective-bargaining agreement expires, the Board's jurisdiction is exclusive insofar as recovery rests on the finding of an unfair labor practice. Laborers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Advanced Lightweight Concrete Co., 108 S.Ct. 830 (1988).

We also agree with the judge that the Charging Parties' failure to meet the ERISA requirement that plan participants exhaust their plan's internal appeal procedures before seeking relief in the courts neither precludes them from filing charges under the Act nor ousts the Board of jurisdiction.

[5] 246 NLRB 1143 (1979).

[6] 265 NLRB 819 (1982).

quent to the judge's decision, and which modified the applicable test.

In Texaco, the Board set forth new principles for determining when an employer's suspension of benefits for disabled employees on commencement of a strike violates the Act. The Board there held that the lawfulness of the discontinuance of benefit payments to disabled employees on commencement of a strike will be resolved by application of the test set forth in NLRB v. Great Dane Trailers, 388 U.S. 26 (1967). Thus, the General Counsel can meet the Great Dane burden of showing an adverse effect on employee rights by showing that a benefit withheld because of a strike was an accrued benefit. At that point the employer may be able to defend its action by showing that it had a legitimate and substantial business justification for cutting off the benefits, such as an explicit waiver by the union, or the employer's reliance on a nondiscriminatory contract interpretation that is reasonably and arguably correct. See Texaco, Inc., supra at 247–248.

Applying these principles in this case, we find that the General Counsel has proven a prima facie 8(a)(3) and (1) case concerning the Respondent's discontinuance of S & A payments to employees Offenburg, Kamann, Obergon, Eversole, and Eckhart and its refusal to make any S & A payments to employee Carsten.

Based on the judge's specific findings and the S & A plan considered in its entirety, we find the Respondent withheld accrued benefits on the basis of a strike. We note that the S & A plan provides that an employee becomes eligible for benefits after at least 26 weeks of continuous active service and that benefits "will be paid" in accordance with a schedule of maximum benefits based on the number of years of continuous service at the time the disability occurs. Benefits are thus due and payable based on past performance with no further work required for continuing receipt.[7] All Charging Parties except Carsten[8] were actually receiving these S & A benefits prior to the beginning of the strike on January 8, 1980. It is not disputed that the Respondent's only reason for ceasing to meet its obligations under the S & A plan was its policy, based on its interpretation of both the collective-bargaining agreement and its past practice, of not paying these benefits during a strike.

Like the judge, we find no merit in the Respondent's argument that benefits are not accrued because the plan provides that it "shall not be construed as creating any binding obligation on [the Respondent] to give, or as giving, anyone any enforceable rights to disability assistance, the right being hereby expressly reserved to grant, or not to grant, any such assistance in any cases as [the Respondent] in its discretion sees fit." This statement is included within the plan provision referring to "Termination of Employment" and directly following the statement to the effect that the plan gives an employee entitled to benefits neither a right to continued employment nor any right to assistance he may be owed in the event his employment is terminated. Thus the quoted provision could reasonably be read as reserving to the Respondent discretion to "grant or not to grant" assistance only in termination situations. Nevertheless, to the extent this provision is intended to provide the Respondent a more general degree of discretion, we find, reading the S & A plan as a whole, that such discretion covers only the Respondent's initial unilateral decision concerning whether claimed disabilities are compensable under the plan. In this regard, the plan provides that certain conditions must be met before assistance will be given to otherwise eligible employees.[9] The record, however, does not show, nor does the Respondent claim, that any of the plan requirements that either disqualify an employee from initial coverage or divest him of coverage already granted applies to any of the Charging Parties in this case.

Thus, because none of the discretionary determinations leading to possible disqualification specifically included in the S & A plan were considered relevant by the Respondent in this case, and because the plan itself contains no reference to loss of benefits in the event of a strike, we find that, under

[7] The S & A plan is noncontributory and is paid for by the Respondent as a current operating expense. The Respondent explicitly reserved the right, without prior notice, to "alter, modify, or terminate" the plan. However, the plan also provides that in the event of withdrawal or modification, "All assistance due an employee will be paid in accordance with the provisions of the plan in effect at the beginning of disability."

[8] Employee Carsten, having been hospitalized only several hours before the strike began, had not yet received any benefit payments based on his disability, as of 4 p.m. on January 8, 1980. In addition to its general contentions covering all the Charging Parties, the Respondent argues that Carsten is not entitled to benefits under the S & A plan because his eligibility did not arise until after the strike began. The Respondent relies on sec. 3(c) of the plan, which provides that "assistance for sickness . . . will begin with the second regularly scheduled work day following the last day worked, assuming that proper notification (to the employee's supervisor) was given." It is not disputed that Carsten gave the required notice. Moreover, the plan's provisions on eligibility referred to above clearly show that, once an employee meets the 26 weeks of work test, assistance is to be provided based on continuous service time at the time of disability, that is, when the employee is no longer able to work. In Carsten's case this occurred before the strike began. Sec. 3(c) of the S & A plan therefore does not render Carsten ineligible for benefits, but merely sets the date on which payments are to begin.

[9] For example, the plan explicitly provides that assistance will not be allowed if an employee fails to give notice of his impending absence because of disability, if a claim is not made within 30 days, if the disability is related to the use of alcohol, drugs, unlawful acts, willful intent to injure himself or another, venereal disease, horseplay, or, under certain circumstances, fighting. Further, the plan provides that payments may not begin or may cease if the employee fails to obtain or continue proper medical care as determined by the Respondent or to provide the Respondent with required medical reports.

any reasonable and arguably correct interpretation of the plan, the withholding from the Charging Parties of their accrued S & A benefits because of the strike warrants the inference of unlawful discriminatory conduct. Consequently, under Texaco the burden shifts to the Respondent to prove a legitimate and substantial business justification.

The Respondent argues that the Union had expressly waived the right of disabled employees to receive S & A benefits in the event of protected strike activity. It relies first on the 1979 Supplemental Agreement to the collective-bargaining agreement that provides in pertinent part that > . . . it is understood and agreed that for the duration of [a] strike, no employer or employee contributions shall be made to any welfare benefit fund for striking employees, and no service credits shall be accrued by such striking employees who are represented by the Union.

The Respondent supports this waiver argument by pointing out that this same contract language has been included in all collective-bargaining agreements negotiated with individual OCAW Locals at its various refineries across the country. The Respondent stresses that pursuant to this provision it has had a consistent past practice of suspending S & A benefits during seven strikes, both industrywide and at individual facilities, from 1959 to 1979. On this basis, the Respondent argues, in essence, that the relevant Locals, including Local 7-346 at Toledo in 1969, waived by acquiescence the rights of their represented disabled employees to continue receiving S & A payments during strikes because no Local had ever, in the words of the judge, "taken legal action to recover [such suspended] benefits."

The judge found it difficult to accept, as do we, the Respondent's argument that the contract language referring to the suspension, during a strike, of "contributions" to any "welfare benefit fund" applies to the S & A plan, which was a noncontributory plan. (See fn. 7, supra.) But, as the judge also reasoned, even assuming for the sake of argument that the language was intended to cover the S & A plan, the Respondent's designation of the six employees as "striking employees" is contrary to the Emerson Electric holding, overruling Southwestern Electric Power Co., 216 NLRB 522 (1975), that an employer may not presume that employees unable to work on and after the commencement of a strike are affirmatively supporting the strike and can therefore have benefits terminated as if they were strikers. The judge further noted that, under Conoco, not even evidence of affirmative acts showing public support for the strike would change these Charging Parties into "striking employees."

We agree with the judge's finding that the Charging Parties were not striking employees. In doing so, however, we do not rely on the judge's use of Emerson's theory of coercion, overruled in Texaco, but only on Conoco's reasoning, affirmed in Texaco, that an employee who is so disabled as to be unable to withhold services from his employer in support of a labor dispute will not ordinarily be classified as a striker. Since the Charging Parties were not "striking employees," the Respondent's argument for contractual waiver fails.[10] We similarly find no merit in the Respondent's argument based on past practice. The judge suggested that the Union's reason for not filing a charge in 1969—when its only previous strike since 1959 occurred—may have been due to the Union's realization that the Respondent was then privileged, under Southwestern Electric, to terminate S & A benefits to disabled employees at the commencement of a strike. However, notwithstanding the Respondent's past practice, Emerson Electric was the law at the time of the 1980 strike.[11] The record shows that at the last negotiating session on the reopened issues held just before the strike began on January 8, 1980, the Union specifically asked the Respondent whether payment to the six disabled employees would continue during the strike. The Respondent answered that it was "still considering the matter." The Respondent's manager of labor relations testified that as of January 8, 1980, he had not yet decided "whether or not we should be guided by the new law under the Emerson decision." After the strike began the Respondent announced that the benefits in question were suspended as of January 8, 1980, without even investigating whether, under the then applicable Emerson Electric remedial limitation, it would have been entitled to do so by showing that the six employees affirmatively supported the strike at its inception.

In short, the purported waiver was not clearly and unmistakably based either on the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement or on past practice. Thus far, the Respondent's positions do not support its claim of a legitimate and substantial business justification for its cessation of benefits.[12]

---

[10] Of course a union and an employer could expressly agree to include all such persons within the class of those called strikers, but no such agreement was shown here.

[11] Emerson Electric issued on December 19, 1979, approximately 3 weeks before the strike.

[12] The Respondent argues that a legitimate business reason to suspend benefits during a strike was its effort to avoid fraudulent employee claims or claims by employees seeking to take advantage of the S & A plan by going on medical disability for nonemergency reasons just before a strike. The judge correctly noted that, although this certainly may constitute a

Continued

II.

We do find merit, however, in the Respondent's claim that the Union, in the April 14 strike settlement, clearly and unmistakably waived the Charging Parties' statutory rights to be free of discrimination or coercion in the denial to them of the contractual S & A benefits.

The letter of agreement "settle[d] all matters negotiated between the parties," extended the collective-bargaining agreement for 1 year, and provided for increases in wages and benefits. Further, in paragraph 7, the Respondent agreed to pay each employee a "one time lump sum payment . . . as a subsidy" for certain insurance premiums assumed by the employees during the strike and the Union agreed to "withdraw its unfair labor practice charges, lawsuits and grievances related to all benefit plans" covered by the 1979 supplemental agreement to the collective-bargaining agreement entitled "Stipulation Covering Welfare Benefit Plans."[13] The Respondent and the Union further provided, in their back-to-work agreement and understanding of April 14 that > [t]he Company and Union agree to withdraw and cause to be dismissed with prejudice all civil actions, unfair labor practice charges, and grievances related to matters that arose during the strike with the exception of [certain specified grievances not here relevant]. It is further agreed that no further civil actions, unfair labor practice charges, or grievances will be initiated by either party, for activity which has occurred during the strike.

In Energy Cooperative, 290 NLRB 635 (1988), the Board addressed a question left open in Texaco and held that waivers of contractual benefits contained in strike settlements may result in dismissal of charges filed by individual employees over the denial of such benefits. Thus, a collective-bargaining representative may waive its individual members' statutory right to receive contractual benefits free from discrimination or coercion. See the discussion of Metropolitan Edison Co. v. NLRB, 460 U.S. 693 (1983), and Ford Motor Co. v. Huffman, 345 U.S. 330 (1953), in Energy Cooperative, supra at 636. Energy Cooperative emphasized Texaco's holding that such a waiver is effective only if it is clear and unmistakable. For the following reasons, we find such a clear and unmistakable waiver here.

The letter of agreement purported to "settle all matters negotiated between the parties."[14] Among those issues was the Respondent's administration of its employee benefit plans, including the S & A plan at issue in this case. Thus, in return for the Union's relinquishment of all its existing claims with respect to employee benefits during the strike, specifically including S & A benefits, the Respondent provided a limited payment to all employees, including those who were sick or disabled during the strike, for certain insurance contributions under the provision of the settlement entitled "Lump Sum Payment."

In the back-to-work agreement and understanding, the parties supplemented and extended this clear resolution of the Union's claim asserted in the unfair labor practice charge it had already filed. By their agreement to "withdraw and cause to be dismissed with prejudice all civil actions, unfair labor practice charges and grievances related to matters that arose during the strike," the Respondent and the Union clearly intended to waive any possible contractual claim the Union or individual employees might otherwise have to S & A benefits denied during the strike. Thus, we conclude that the parties' settlement agreements establish that the Union clearly and unmistakably waived its sick and disabled employees' rights to receive contractual S & A benefits during the strike.

Finally, for the reasons set forth in Texaco and Energy Cooperative, we shall give effect to this strike settlement agreement that we have found has met the demanding standard of clearly and unmistakably waiving the statutory right of individual employees to receive contractual benefits free from discrimination. It effectuates the purposes and policies of the Act to give effect to a private settlement amicably resolving a labor dispute when the Union was entitled to waive individual rights in securing the good of the entire unit and was empowered to bind unit members wholly apart from their separate consent.[15] Accordingly, we shall dismiss the complaint.

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed.

---

legitimate business concern, the Respondent made no argument that the Charging Parties had been such employees. In any event, under the terms of the S & A plan discussed above, the Respondent was entitled to make nondiscriminatory determinations as to whether any particular claim would be compensable.

[13] The sickness and accident plan was among those covered by the stipulation.

[14] Member Cracraft would not rely on the zipper clause contained in the letter of agreement as evidence of the parties' intent that individuals' rights to S & A benefits were waived.

[15] Chairman Stephens notes that none of the factors discussed in his concurring opinion in Energy Cooperative as possible barriers to the Board's reliance on a settlement are present in this case.

Richard F. Mack, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Deborah O. Cantrell, Esq., Fred F. Bates, Esq. and W. H. Locke, of Houston, Texas, for the Respondent.
Gary Offenburg Sr., of Freemont, Ohio, Norman Kamann, of Toledo, Ohio, and Robert F. Carsten, of Oregon, Ohio, for the Charging Parties, pro se.

DECISION

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

BENJAMIN SCHLESINGER, Administrative Law Judge. This proceeding was heard before me in Toledo, Ohio, on June 28, 1982. The principal issue presented is whether Respondent Gulf Oil Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by suspending or not paying health benefits to certain of its employees during the course of a strike called by Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union Local No. 7-346 (the Union).[1]

Respondent and the Union were parties to a collective-bargaining agreement that, although in effect from January 8, 1979, to January 7, 1981, provided for a reopener on wage increases, fully paid health care benefits, and vacation improvements on the Union's written notice to Respondent no earlier than November 1, 1979. If the parties failed to reach agreement thereafter, the Union was entitled to strike no earlier than January 8, 1980. Notice was given, negotiations failed, and a strike commenced on January 8, 1980, at 4 p.m. Respondent refused for any period after 4 p.m. on January 8, and until April 19, 1980, the day after Respondent resumed operations, to pay sickness and accident benefits to six employees who were qualified for and of whom five were paid benefits prior to the commencement of the strike.[2] None of the employees affirmatively participated in any strike activities at the commencement of the strike, although the names of some of them were included on a union picket duty roster.

In Conoco, Inc., 265 NLRB 819 (1982), the Board reaffirmed its decision in Emerson Electric Co., 246 NLRB 1143 (1979), enfd. as modified 650 F.2d 463 (3d Cir. 1981), that an employer violates Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by terminating "certain sick[ness] and accident benefits that it had been paying to disabled employees solely because other employees then actively employed [by] the employer had gone out on strike." Conoco, supra at 820. The Board continued (id. at 820):

> [D]isabled employees had a Section 7 right to refrain from declaring their position on a strike while they [are] medically excused, and . . . an employer could no longer require its disabled employees to disavow strike action during their sick leave in order to receive disability benefits. . . . [T]o allow the termination of such benefits to certain employees as a result solely of the strike activities of others was to penalize employees who had not yet acted in support of the strike.

As a result of this most recent adherence to the rule in Emerson, Respondent's contention that the rule in Emerson is "unreasonable and in conflict with well-established principles of labor law" must be rejected. Further, unless there are some distinguishing facts requiring a contrary conclusion, Emerson holds that Respondent's suspension of sickness and accident benefits is a violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. The principal thrust of Respondent's defense is bottomed on its assumptions that it and the Union contractually agreed that these payments would be suspended during a strike, that the parties had applied that principle in their past practice, and that in any event the Union expressly waived any claim to such benefits by negotiating a $150 lump-sum payment in settlement of the issue. I reject all these claims.

The parties' various agreements state: "[I]t is understood and agreed that for the duration of [a] strike, no employer or employee contributions shall be made to any welfare benefit plan for striking employees, and no service credits shall be accrued by union striking employees who are represented by the Union." (Emphasis added.) No contributions were ever paid by Respondent into its sickness and accident plan; instead, when an employee became ill or suffered an accident, the employee was paid from Respondent's general funds. It is difficult to argue, therefore, as Respondent does, that this language cut off all its responsibilities for the payment of sickness or accident benefits. But, assuming, arguendo, that it was intended to cover the sickness and accident plan as well, I nonetheless conclude, as the Board did in Conoco, supra at 819, 823 fn. 11, that the parties' agreement extended only to withholding sickness and accident benefits from those employees who were on strike. The [1] Respondent admits, and I find, that it has been at all times material a corporation duly authorized to do business under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and has and does maintain offices in the State of Ohio. Respondent is engaged in the processing, nonretail sale, and distribution of petroleum and related products. During the year ending December 31, 1979, it manufactured, sold, and distributed from its Toledo, Ohio facility (that closed in 1981) products valued in excess of $50,000, of which amount products in excess of $50,000 were shipped from its Toledo, Ohio location directly to points located outside the State of Ohio. I conclude, and Respondent admits, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act.

---

The relevant docket entries are as follows: All the charges, except the one filed in Case 8-CA-13895-6, were filed by the respective Charging Parties on June 5, 1980. The other was filed on June 6, 1980. An order consolidating the cases and the consolidated complaint issued on October 31, 1980.

[2] Gary Offenberg Sr. suffered a torn knee ligament on November 12, 1979, received benefits commencing November 13 (when he had surgery), was hospitalized for about 3 weeks, had a cast on his leg until the end of February 1980, and was released from his doctor's care to return to work on May 1, 1980. Respondent resumed paying benefits to Offenburg on April 19. Norman Kamann suffered from amnesia and was hospitalized for a week commencing on January 7, 1980, received benefits from 2:30 p.m. on January 8, and was allowed to return to work on January 18, 1980. Jacquelyn Obergon went on pregnancy sick leave, received benefits from November 1, 1979, and was allowed to return to work on March 17, 1980. Glenn Eversole suffered from vascular insufficiency, received benefits from January 3, 1980, and was allowed to return to work on January 21, 1980. Walter Eckhart suffered from sinusitis, received benefits commencing on December 10, 1979, and was released to return to work on January 10, 1980. Robert F. Carsten suffered from benign prostatic hypertrophy, was hospitalized on January 8, 1980 (before the beginning of the strike), received no sickness benefits, and was released by his physician to return to work commencing on March 10, 1980.

six employees here, who were sick or otherwise disabled on January 8, 1980, were not on strike or "striking employees"; they were sick or disabled employees incapable of working or striking. It is true that the Union had listed some of them for picket line duty, but that indicated only the Union's desire that they should actively participate in the strike, and not the employees' acquiescence or participation in the other employees' concerted activities. The record is otherwise barren of any attempt by Respondent to ascertain whether the six employees supported the strike at its commencement.

There is some record evidence that the Union had never taken legal action to recover benefits that had been suspended on the commencement of a strike. That may have been due, in part, to the Union's agreement that denials of benefits were not arbitrable and the Board's prior rule in Southwestern Electric Power Co., 216 NLRB 522 (1975), overruled in Emerson in 1979, that an employer could reasonably presume that employees on sick leave before the commencement of a strike supported it merely because it was effective and the employees were union members. On the other hand, there is evidence that certain employees' sick benefits were continued during the course of a strike in 1952, and that the Union often requested that Respondent continue to pay benefits to employees who were receiving benefits at the commencement of the strike. I do not find that the Union agreed with Respondent's actions. In any event, it appears Respondent's primary concern was with fraudulent employee claims for benefits or, at least, employees taking advantage of a scheduled strike by undergoing voluntary surgery immediately prior to the strike in order to maintain continued benefits during the strike. Whatever legitimacy there may be in Respondent's position,[3] here there is no claim that any of the six employees took advantage of the situation by claiming illness immediately prior to the strike.

Respondent also claims that the benefits due under its sickness and accident plans are not accrued benefits but are wages. The type of specific benefits was not discussed in Conoco but was in Emerson, both by the Board and the court of appeals. The term "accrued" may be used to indicate a variety of situations; it appears clear that both Conoco and Emerson defined them as benefits that did not depend on any return to work or on any future services to the employer. Rather, they were earned by reason of prior work performed and became due by reason of the event of a sickness and accident. Once the precondition was met, the benefit accrued to the employee.[4] Here, benefits are paid only to employees who were employed for 26 weeks and are paid in accordance with a schedule that is based on an employee's past years of continuous service. An employee with less than 1 year may receive 2 weeks of full pay and 2 weeks of half pay, and an employee with 10 or more years of service may receive 12 weeks full pay and 40 weeks of half pay. Employees with 1 year or more (up to 10 years of service) receive varying amounts of benefits depending on their exact length of service. I conclude that, once the precondition of sickness or accident had occurred, the benefit not only accrued, but also vested for the number of full and half weeks' wages to which each employee was entitled, contingent, of course, on the length of time the employee was unable to work.[5]

Respondent contends that the Union waived any claim for the sickness and accident benefits sought here. During the strike, the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge on behalf of the employees whose benefits had been suspended. In a letter agreement, dated April 8, 1980, settling the strike, the Union agreed to "withdraw its unfair labor practice charges, lawsuits and grievances related to all benefit plans in recognition of STIPULATION COVERING WELFARE BENEFITS PLANS (SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENT) dated the 29th of January, 1979." The Union complied with this agreement, but the individual employees filed their own charges. I find that there was no agreement that the employees were barred from doing so or that the Union waived their right to do so (or was empowered to do so). Furthermore, I reject Respondent's argument that the six employees received $150 in settlement of their claims for sickness and accident claims. The agreement recites only that all of Respondent's employees would receive that amount for contributions which employees apparently had made to retain their coverage during the strike under other group fringe benefit funds, and the reimbursement was unrelated to the claims of the six employees in this proceeding for sickness and accident benefits. In any event, a waiver of Emerson rights must be clear and unmistakable; here, it was not. Texaco, supra at 1222; Conoco, supra at 834 fn. 11.

I have considered and reject the numerous other defenses interposed by Respondent. First, no authority has been cited, and I find no logic in its position that the Employment Retirement Income Security Act, 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq., in any way preempts the Board from its jurisdiction over correcting violations of the Act, merely because the discrimination adversely affects rights that to some extent may also be protected under ERISA. See 29 U.S.C. § 1144. Second, Board law does not require that an affected employee must pursue internal appeals procedures before filing a claim under the Act. Even if that were so, the appeal would have had to be presented to [3] In any event, see Conoco, supra at 834 fn. 9; Texaco, Inc., 259 NLRB 1217, 1222 (1982).

[4] Emerson, supra at 469. Respondent appears to argue that payments of benefits were merely voluntary. Although that may have been so years ago, when Respondent and the Union began to negotiate the terms and conditions of employment of Respondent's employees, including fringe benefit plans, Respondent agreed with the Union that it would not change or modify its commitment to "continue" its plans "in effect." The gist of Respondent's argument is that it may discontinue benefits for reasons that violate the Act and unilaterally change terms and conditions of employment. Board law is too well settled to require any comment.

[5] Further support for this conclusion is found in the agreements and various stipulations between Respondent and the Union requiring the continuation of the various fringe benefit plans. The latter uniformly provide that in the event the Union ceases to represent the employees, any rights "accruing to any individual employees" shall continue in effect. The former provide that in the event of a strike, no service credits shall accrue. The necessary implication is that the parties recognized that there were rights and credits that accrued.

Respondent's refinery manager,[6] clearly not a neutral, but one who would have reflected Respondent's position that the instant claims here should be suspended. Accordingly, any appeal would have been meaningless. Third, the claims arose when benefits were suspended (formal notification was given by Respondent on January 13, 1980), well within the 6 months prior to the filing of the unfair labor practice charges. Fourth, and finally, the claim that the General Counsel is barred by laches has no foundation in law or fact. Preston H. Haskell Co., 238 NLRB 943, 949 fn. 20 (1978), enf. denied on other grounds 616 F.2d 136 (5th Cir. 1980).

I conclude that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. I shall therefore recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. Specifically, I shall recommend that Respondent pay to the Charging Parties the sickness and accident benefits for the period commencing on January 8, 1980 at 4 p.m. (except Carsten, whose benefits shall commence on January 9, 1980)[7] through the date each employee was able to return to work or the date on which the benefits that each terminated employee was entitled, whichever date is earlier,[8] and that interest be paid thereon, to be computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[9] Because Respondent has closed its Toledo, Ohio facility, I shall also order that the notice to its former employees be mailed, and in the event Respondent reopens its Toledo facility, then post the notice. Sturgis-Newport Business Forms, 227 NLRB 1426 (1977), enfd. 563 F.2d 1252 (5th Cir. 1977).

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

[6] Respondent claims that an appeal would have to be filed with the administrator of the plan, who is its area manager of human resources of the East Coast area. The description of the plan states otherwise. In any event, the administrator testified that he, too, would have denied an appeal from the suspension of these claims.

[7] The sickness and accident plan provides for a 1-day waiting period for the payment of benefits. Carsten's claim, however, accrued prior to the strike.

[8] Conoco, supra. Whether the employees actually participated in strike activities after the commencement of the strike is immaterial for the purposes of the remedy recommended here. Id. at 820–823.

[9] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

Fishbach/Lord Electric Company and Jack L. Marsh

International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local Union 112, AFL–CIO and Michael S. June and Robert L. Albert Knapp, and Thomas E. McKenzie and Jack L. Marsh, and Jimmy M. Scott. Cases 19–CA–15220,[1] 19–CB–4486, 19–CB–4496, 19–CB–4501, 19–CB–4636, and 19–CB–4650

September 21, 1988

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On May 23, 1984, the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order in this proceeding[2] in which the Board, inter alia, ordered the Respondent, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local Union 112, AFL–CIO (Local 112) to make whole Charging Parties June, Knapp, McKenzie, and Scott for any losses suffered as a result of Local 112's discrimination against them in hiring hall dispatch decisions. On September 4, 1987, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the Board's finding that Local 112 thereby violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2), and on November 13, 1987, the court entered a judgment enforcing, in relevant part, the Board's Order.[3] A controversy having arisen over the amount of backpay due under the Board's Order, as enforced by the court, the Regional Director for Region 19 issued and duly served on Local 112 a backpay and an amended backpay specification and notice of hearing alleging the amount of backpay due the discriminatees. Local 112 filed a timely answer to the amended backpay specification generally denying each allegation of the specification and, in addition, stating several affirmative defenses.

On June 20, 1988, the General Counsel filed with the Board a motion to strike answer of Local 112 and for summary judgment in favor of the General Counsel, with exhibits attached. On June 23, 1988, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the General Counsel's motion should not be granted. On July 6, 1988, Local 112 filed a response to the Notice to Show Cause.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

On the entire record in this case, the Board makes the following

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.54(b) and (c) of the Board's Rules and Regulations states:

> (b) Contents of the answer to specification.—The answer to the specification shall be in writing, the original being signed and sworn to by the respondent or by a duly authorized agent with appropriate power of attorney affixed, and shall contain the post office address of the respondent. The respondent shall specifically admit, deny, or explain each and every allegation of the specification, unless the respondent is without knowledge, in which case the respondent shall so state, such statement operating as a denial. Denials shall fairly meet the substance of the allegations of the specification denied. When a respondent intends to deny only a part of an allegation, the respondent shall specify so much of its as is true and shall deny only the remainder. As to all matters within the knowledge of the respondent, including but not limited to the various factors entering into the computation of gross backpay, a general denial shall not suffice. As to such matters, if the respondent disputes either the accuracy of the figures in the specification or the premises on which they are based, he shall specifically state the basis for his disagreement, setting forth in detail his position as to the applicable premises and furnishing the appropriate supporting figures.
>
> (c) Effect of failure to answer or to plead specifically and in detail to the specification.—If the respondent fails to file any answer to the specification within the time prescribed by this section, the Board may, either with or without taking evidence in support of the allegations of the specification and without notice to the respondent, find the specification to be true and enter such order as may be appropriate. If the respondent files an answer to the specification but fails to deny any allegation of the specification in the manner required by subsection (b) of this section, and the failure so to deny is not adequately explained, such allegation shall be deemed to be admitted to be true, and may be so found by the Board without the taking of evidence supporting such allegation, and the respondent shall be precluded from introducing any evidence controverting said allegation.

In its answer to the backpay specification, Local 112 offered a general denial to each of the allegations of the specification. Thus, Local 112 has generally denied the accuracy of the General Counsel's allegations concerning the backpay periods for each discriminatee, the formula used to compute gross backpay (including benefits owned both to individual discriminatees and to various benefit funds), the computation of gross backpay for each discriminatee, the amount of interim earnings for each discriminatee, the method of computing net backpay, and the computation of net backpay for each discriminatee. The General Counsel asserts that information regarding each of these matters is within Local 112's knowledge, and that it has failed to state the basis for its disagreement with any of the allegations in the specification. Accordingly, the General Counsel contends that Local 112's general denials do not comply with the requirements of Section 102.54(b), the answer should be stricken and the allegations of the specification be deemed admitted as true, and summary judgment should be granted regarding the backpay specification in its entirety.

[1] About May 11, 1988, the parties mutually resolved the issues in dispute in Case 19–CA–15220.

[2] 270 NLRB 856, affd. in relevant part 827 F.2d 530 (9th Cir. 1987).

[3] No. 84–7556.

We agree with the General Counsel regarding all allegations of the backpay specification involving the formula for gross backpay and the resulting computations as well as the formula for net backpay. Because all data at issue concerning gross backpay is within Local 112's knowledge and control, its failure to set forth fully its position as to the applicable premises or to furnish appropriate supporting figures is contrary to the specificity requirements of Section 102.54(b). We find, however, that Local 112's general denial is sufficient to place interim earnings into issue for all the discriminatees because that information is generally not within the knowledge of a respondent.[4]

Accordingly, concerning all allegations in the backpay specification except as to amounts of interim earnings, we grant the General Counsel's motion to strike Local 112's answer and we deem such allegations to be admitted as true.[5] Therefore, we shall grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment only in part and shall direct a hearing limited to the determination of a discriminatees' interim earnings, including the availability to the discriminatees of interim employment and their efforts to seek and retain such interim employment.

ORDER

It is ordered that the General Counsel's motion to strike the Respondent's answer to the amended backpay specification is granted, except regarding the allegation concerning the amounts of interim earnings by the discriminatees.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted except concerning the allegation concerning the amounts of interim earnings by the discriminatees.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this proceeding is remanded to the Regional Director for Region 19 for the purpose of issuing a notice of hearing and scheduling a hearing before an administrative law judge for the purpose of taking evidence as to the alleged interim earnings of Michael June, Robert Knapp, Thomas McKenzie, and Jimmy Scott. The judge shall prepare and serve on the parties a supplemental decision containing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations based on all the record evidence. Following service of the judge's supplemental decision on the parties, the provisions of Section 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations shall be applicable.

[4] Tiffany Handbags, 271 NLRB 621 (1984); Dews Construction Corp., 246 NLRB 945 (1979).

[5] In its answer, Local 112 states two "affirmative defenses" not directly related to the issue of interim earnings in addition to its general denials. First, it argues that discriminatees Knapp and McKenzie were not entitled to hiring hall referrals in the first instance because they did not possess electrician licenses required under state law. However, this issue has been fully litigated, see 270 NLRB 856 at fn. 3, and the court enforced the Board's Order as to all four discriminatees. Second, regarding Local 112's assertion that it is financially unable to satisfy the backpay order, it is well settled that "the issue in a backpay proceeding is the amount due and not whether [the Respondent is] able to pay." Columbia Engineers, 268 NLRB 337 (1983); Star Grocery Co., 245 NLRB 196, 197 (1979). Accordingly, we grant the General Counsel's motion to strike these "defenses" from the answer to the backpay specification.

Community Transit Services, Inc. and Amalgamated Transit Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, Local 256, Petitioner. Case 20–RC–16015

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On May 23, 1986 the Regional Director for Region 20 issued a Decision and Direction of Election in this proceeding, in which he asserted jurisdiction over the Employer under the test set forth in National Transportation Service, 240 NLRB 565 (1979). The Employer filed a timely request for review, and on June 30, 1986, the Board issued an Order granting the request for review and remanding the above-captioned proceeding to the Regional Director for further consideration in light of the decisions in Res-Care, Inc., 280 NLRB 670 (1986), and Long Stretch Youth Home, 280 NLRB 678 (1986), "including a reopening of the record, if necessary, and the issuance of a Supplemental Decision, if appropriate." On September 11, 1986, the Regional Director issued an Order reopening the record and remanding the proceeding for further hearing pursuant to the Board's remand order. On November 5, 1986, a hearing was held pursuant to the Regional Director's order.

On May 18, 1987, the Acting Regional Director issued a Supplemental Decision and Order rescinding the initial Decision and Direction of Election and directing that the petition be dismissed. The Acting Regional Director, applying the standards set forth in Res-Care, supra, and Long Stretch, supra, concluded that the Employer did not have the final say over the employees' wages and benefits and, therefore, was precluded from engaging in meaningful bargaining with the Union. Pursuant to Section 102.67 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the Petitioner filed a timely request for review of the Acting Regional Director's Supplemental Decision and Order, which the Board granted by mailgram dated November 6, 1987.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the entire record in this proceeding with respect to the issues under review. We find that the Employer retains control over sufficient terms and conditions of employment and that the limitations imposed by the exempt entity are insufficient to preclude the Employer from engaging in meaningful bargaining. Accordingly, we conclude, contrary to the Acting Regional Director, that jurisdiction should be asserted.

The Employer, Community Transit Services, Inc. (CTS) is a California corporation that provides public transportation in Yuba City, California, pursuant to a series of contracts negotiated with the the Hub Area Transit Authority (HATA). HATA is a governmental entity that operates under a joint powers agreement among Sutter County, Yuba County, the city of Marysville, and Yuba City to provide transportation services. The Employer has contracted with HATA since 1978, and the most recent agreement negotiated was in effect from July 1, 1986, through June 30, 1987. HATA owns the buses as well as the fares collected, and the name HATA appears on the side of the to the routes determined by HATA. HATA approves the uniforms that are worn by the CTS drivers.

In 1984, a performance audit was conducted by an independent consultant of HATA's costs and expenditures, which resulted in HATA's adoption and incorporation in its contract with CTS of certain measures to reduce HATA's operating costs. The first of these modifications was an agreement that CTS would bill HATA for actual costs rather than HATA compensating CTS for projected expenditures. Another important change incorporated in the 1985–1986 CTS/HATA contract was a provision whereby CTS agreed not to exceed the maximum hourly wage for the employee classifications set forth in an attachment to the contract. The consultant also suggested that HATA solicit bids from other contractors to reduce its costs. To dissuade HATA from soliciting bids from other contractors, CTS agreed to freeze its wage rates at the previous year's scale and thus ensure the continuity of the contract. The wage scales CTS attached to the contract had not been previously negotiated with HATA.

The wage attachment lists starting wages and periodic increases for the classifications of vehicle operators, controllers/dispatchers, vehicle washers/janitors, maintenance/helper, and mechanics. The wage rate attachment provides for merit increases for the classifications of vehicle operators and controllers/dispatchers. Jon Monson, the Employer's vice president of operations, testified that no merit increases had been granted after 1985. The wages of a number of employees who received merit increases of 5 to 15 cents an hour prior to the 1985 freeze and who are still being paid in excess of the corresponding wage rate for their classification are not reflected in the attachment. There is no maximum hourly rate set forth for employees who have been employed more than 6 years. The wage scale and rates of the 1985–1986 agreement were incorporated in the 1986–1987 contract without change.

The contract does not require that CTS' wages be comparable to those of city or county employees, or set forth any guidelines or restrictions that wages must conform to any minimum standards. According to both William Harper, HATA chairman, and Allen Eager, a HATA board member, the purpose of attaching the wage scale to the contract is to provide information and to serve as a check by HATA on CTS' billings. According to Harper, HATA does not approve the actual wages, promotions, or overtime pay given to employees. Further, Harper stated, CTS could pay higher wages as long as it does not affect what CTS bills HATA. If, however, CTS wanted to obtain reimbursement for amounts in excess of those set forth in the wage scale for a certain classification, it must obtain prior HATA approval.

The 1986–1987 contract awards CTS a total annual sum of $602,077, which is divided into three principal areas. The contract awards $320,477 for fixed costs, an amount distributed as a weekly fee of $6163. This weekly fee compensates CTS for vehicle operators' nonservice wages, management's controllers' and maintenance employees' wages, those employees' fringe benefits and indirect labor costs, bus washing and cleaning supplies, uniforms, report reproduction, dispatch office supplies, radio maintenance, vehicle insurance, vehicle preventive maintenance, project telephones, and all other operating costs. The contract also awards CTS $299,100 a year in variable costs for "Vehicle Operator Revenue Labor." This amount is divided by a maximum of 38,922 vehicle service hours for an hourly amount per vehicle service hour of $7.685. The hourly rate compensates CTS for vehicle operators' wages, fringe benefits, and indirect labor costs. Finally, the contract gives CTS $62,500 as a management fee. There are no provisions in the contract specifying the manner in which this amount shall be used.

The fixed and variable costs for a 12-month period are described in the contract as projected costs, and the contract requires that CTS present HATA with a summary of its actual costs for each calendar quarter. CTS submits to HATA monthly a labor distribution report showing the hours worked and the gross wages earned by each employee. If the actual costs are lower than the projected costs, the contract provides that the sums owed for vehicle service hours and the weekly fee shall be adjusted downward to the actual costs. However, if a downward adjustment is made and a refund paid to HATA in a particular quarter, HATA will reimburse CTS for actual costs in excess of projected costs in the following quarter in an amount not to exceed the prior quarterly adjustment. Other than this provision, the contract does not obligate HATA to pay CTS for expenditures incurred in excess of projected costs. Although HATA's primary concern is that CTS not exceed the total contract price, the record is unclear whether HATA would allow CTS to transfer funds allotted for one purpose to cover expenses incurred in another area.

The contract defines the relationship of CTS with HATA as that of an independent contractor. In a policy statement issued on April 22, 1986, HATA reaffirmed its position that it views CTS as an independent contractor and stated that HATA will not intervene in the employer-employee relationship between CTS and its employees. According to Harper, the intent of both the contract and the policy statement is that HATA will not be involved in CTS' labor relations. Eager also stated that HATA is not to be involved in setting terms and conditions of employment for CTS employees.

The CTS Yuba City location is managed by a site supervisor, who in turn reports to a regional manager headquartered in Fairfield, California. CTS follows a companywide uniform policy regarding all its fringe benefits, i.e., health and life insurance, holidays, and vacations, as well as a stock ownership plan. The contract with HATA is silent concerning CTS' employee fringe benefits and HATA sets no standards, limitations, or review procedures on the fringe benefits CTS awards its employees. CTS has changed health insurance carriers without notifying HATA or seeking prior approval.

Similarly, CTS also maintains a uniform companywide policy in other personnel areas through the use of an employee handbook that covers areas such as discipline, grievances, promotions, performance appraisals, probationary periods, and overtime. In order to ensure compliance with the manual and enforcement of CTS' policies, monthly meetings are conducted with the different area supervisors and CTS' manager of labor relations. There is no HATA intervention in any of the above-stated areas.

CTS conducts all its hiring at the Yuba City facility, with the exception of the site supervisor, without intervention from HATA.[1] The contract specifically provides that HATA will not interfere in the disciplining and firing of CTS employees although HATA may advise CTS of any employee's inadequate performance and demand, in extreme cases, the removal of an employee. There is evidence of one instance in which CTS terminated an employee at HATA's request, although the circumstances are not set forth in the record. The training of new employees at the Yuba City location is conducted by CTS. The contract with HATA does require that CTS submit its training program for HATA's review and approval, as well as submit a list of the drivers who have completed the training. CTS must also, according to the contract, conduct monthly safety meetings that have been attended by the HATA manager.

[1] The contract requires that the site supervisor be approved by HATA. According to Monson, the resume of the Yuba facility site supervisor was submitted to HATA at the time of his hire.

In Res-Care, supra, and in Long Stretch, supra, the Board reaffirmed and refined the principles set forth in National Transportation Service, supra, for determining whether assertion of jurisdiction over an employer providing services to or for an exempt entity is warranted. Under National Transportation Service, supra, once it is determined that an employer meets the definition of "employer" in Section 2(b) of the Act the inquiry is whether the employer retains sufficient control over the employment conditions of its employees to engage in meaningful and effective bargaining with a union. In Res-Care, the Board complemented this inquiry by setting forth its counterpart, an examination of the amount of control exercised by the exempt entity over an employer, particularly in the areas of wages and fringe benefits. In Res-Care, the Board concluded that it was the exempt entity, the Department of Labor (DOL), that retained the ultimate discretion for setting wage and benefit levels, thus effectively precluding the employer from meaningful bargaining.

In the instant case, the Acting Regional Director found that the control exercised by HATA was similar to the control exercised by the exempt entity over the employer in Res-Care, and therefore precluded meaningful bargaining. The Acting Regional Director relied on HATA's ability to set direct limitations on the maximum amounts of employee compensation as well as the need for prior HATA approval, and concluded that HATA effectively controlled the wages and benefits CTS could provide its employees.

We find that the Acting Regional Director erred in including benefits as items controlled by HATA. The contract contains no mention of limits on the fringe benefits that CTS may accord its employees. Further, there is no evidence that HATA has reviewed or has knowledge of the benefits offered by TS. Although the contract lists fringe benefits as one of the items for which CTS is compensated, no restrictions are attached, and their inclusion is only part of a general description of the overall items for which CTS is awarded moneys. The contract offers compensation for costs CTS might incur in the area of fringe benefits but it is not tantamount to finding that HATA exercises direct monetary control in these areas. CTS grants and implements fringe benefits based on companywide policy and financial considerations relating to its whole operation, not just the Yuba City facility. Based on these considerations, CTS alone determines health and life insurance, vacations, paid holidays, and the stock ownership plan for its employees.

However, as regards wages, the HATA contract does impose limitations by effectively precluding CTS from raising its wage rates above the amounts set forth in the attachment to the contract. Although the salary rates are initially set by CTS, once they are incorporated into the contract they become an integral part of the contract price and cannot be modified without HATA's prior approval if CTS wishes to ensure reimbursement. Thus, HATA, by requiring prior approval for payment of wages beyond a specified amount, controls the salaries of CTS' employees and impedes meaningful bargaining over this subject.[2]

In contrast to the employer in Res-Care, however, CTS retains control over all other economic and noneconomic bargainable subjects.[3] The Employer controls a myriad of economic terms and conditions of employment, i.e., health and life insurance, vacations, paid holidays, overtime, sick and annual leave, and the stock ownership plan, as well as all other noneconomic personnel related matters.[4] CTS exclusively handles, in conformity with its employee handbook and its policy of central labor relations, all its personnel-related matters in the areas of grievances, discipline, promotions, performance appraisals, leaves of absence, and overtime. CTS also conducts all its hiring, firing, and training. HATA's limited control is directed at ensuring the minimum qualifications of the employees. Although the site supervisor's resume must be approved by HATA, there is no evidence that HATA has actually participated in the hiring decision or opposed any candidate selected by CTS.

---

[2] Res-Care, supra, fns. 12 and 14. See PHP Healthcare Corp., 285 NLRB 182 (1987).

[3] Res-Care had to submit for DOL's approval its personnel policies concerning compensatory-time, overtime, severance pay, holidays, vacations, probationary employment, sick leave, cost of living increases, incentives, and equal employment opportunities. DOL also imposed restrictions in other personnel related matters. Res-Care had to submit its selection criteria and hiring procedures for DOL approval. Further, DOL had to specifically approve the hiring of the center director, all senior staff and supervisors, all the employees who made more than $15,000 a year, and relatives of currently employed employees.

[4] Although Res-Care held that wages and benefits are the primary elements which must be examined in the employer-exempt entity relationship, Res-Care recognized the importance of evaluating the controls exercised by the exempt entity and the employer in other personnel related areas, i.e. discipline, hiring, and grievances, in order to determine whether meaningful bargaining is possible. Res-Care, supra.

The limitations on wages, along with the very limited controls by HATA, are insufficient, in and of themselves, to warrant a finding that the employer is precluded from engaging in any meaningful bargaining. To decline jurisidiction in this case based solely on the basis of these limitations would understate all the other areas over which the Employer exercises effective control, and would ignore the underlying premise of both National Transportation and Res-Care, that the Board will assert jurisdiction unless the employer cannot effectively bargain with the union over the terms and conditions of employment of its employees.[5]

Based on the foregoing, we find, after examining the degree of control exercised by CTS as well as by HATA over CTS' labor relations, that CTS retains sufficient control over the essential terms and conditions of employment of its employees to enable it to engage in meaningful bargaining. Accordingly, the Acting Regional Director's Supplemental Decision and Order is reversed and we shall reinstate the petition and remand to the Regional Director for further appropriate action.

ORDER

The petition in Case 20–RC–16015 is reinstated and remanded to the Regional Director for appropriate action.

---

[5] In Res-Care, supra, the Board at one point stated that if an employer does not have the final say on the entire package of employee compensation, i.e., wages and benefits, meaningful bargaining is not possible. Id. Viewed in isolation, this statement could arguably stand for the proposition that the employer must retain control over each of the economic aspects of its labor relations if meaningful bargaining is to be possible. This statement, however, read in the context of the decision, merely stressed the Board's position that to ensure meaningful bargaining the employer must exercise control over economic terms and conditions of employment, rather than control over solely noneconomic terms.

Chairman Stephens agrees that this case is distinguishable from Res-Care on this point, and he also finds this position consistent with his concurring view in Res-Care.

News/Sun-Sentinel Company and Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO. Case 12–CA–11916

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On March 11, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Lawrence W. Cullen issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, the General Counsel and the Charging Party filed cross-exceptions and supporting and answering briefs, and the Respondent filed a brief in opposition to the Charging Party's cross-exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, News/Sun-Sentinel Company, Fort Lauderdale, Florida, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(a).

"(a) Refusing to recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining unit representative of employees employed by the Respondent performing composing room work at its Fort Lauderdale, Florida newspaper in Broward County, Florida."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a).

"(a) Recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees employed by the Respondent performing composing room work at its Fort Lauderdale, Florida newspaper in Broward County, Florida, exclusive of office clerical employees, professional employees, and supervisors as defined in the Act."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.[3]

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO as

---

[1] The General Counsel excepts to the judge's description of a stipulation entered into by the Respondent and the General Counsel as consisting of facts and conclusions contained in the Regional Director's original dismissal of charges. The General Counsel stipulated only to the facts contained in the Regional Director's dismissal letter, not to the conclusions reached by the Regional Director. This error does not affect the judge's conclusions.

In sec. IV,A,1, par. 4, the judge refers to employee Norma Scheer. The reference should be to Irene Scherer. The judge finds that the tally of ballots from the ballot box in the composing room was 41 for merger, 13 against merger; the correct tally was 41 for merger, 3 against. We correct these errors, which do not affect the judge's conclusions.

In adopting the judge's finding that the merger between Local 895 and Local 430 was valid, we find it unnecessary to rely on the judge's discussion of the Respondent's January 28, 1986 speech to employees and the subsequent decertification petition filed by an employee on February 11, 1986.

We agree with the judge's finding that there was substantial continuity of representative between premerger Local 895 and postmerger Local 430. The change effected here by the merger of Local 895 with Local 430 is unlike the change at issue in Western Commercial Transport, 288 NLRB 214 (1988), in which a small, completely autonomous independent union was replaced by an 8500-member organization, 1 of whose business agents essentially assumed control of collective bargaining and day-to-day contract administration for the unit employees. As the judge found here, some of Local 895's officers became officers in postmerger Local 430 and the chapel's own authority over collective bargaining and contract administration matters remained substantially unaltered by the merger of the Locals. The change was not "sufficiently dramatic to alter the union's identity" so as to raise a question concerning representation. See May Department Stores Co., 289 NLRB 661, 665 (1988), citing NLRB v. Financial Institution Employees Local 1182, 475 U.S. 192, 206 (1986). We do not rely on Quemetco, Inc., 226 NLRB 1398 (1976), which Western Commercial Transport, overruled to the extent that it held that an amendment of certification may be granted notwithstanding evidence showing the absence of continuity of representation.

Member Johansen agrees with his colleagues, for reasons stated by him in his dissent in Western Commercial Transport, 288 NLRB 214 (1988), that the merger in this case did not give rise to a question concerning representation.

[2] Although the judge correctly described the unit in the body of his decision, he misdescribed the unit in his recommended Order and notice. We shall conform the recommended Order and notice with the judge's findings.

the exclusive representative of the unit employees described below.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees performing composing room work at our Fort Lauderdale, Florida newspaper facility, exclusive of office clerical employees, professional employees, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

NEWS/SUN-SENTINEL COMPANY

Andreas Rivera-Ortiz, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Bonnie A. Glatzer, Esq. (Seyfarth, Shaw, Fairweather, & Geraldson), of New York, New York, and Dennis R. Homerin, Esq., of Chicago, Illinois, for the Respondent.
Richard Rosenblatt, Esq., of Colorado Springs, Colorado, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

LAWRENCE W. CULLEN, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard before me on 15 and 16 June 1987 at Miami, Florida, pursuant to a complaint filed by the Regional Director for Region 12 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) against News/Sun-Sentinel Company (the Respondent or the Employer or the Sun/Sentinel). The complaint, as amended at the hearing, is based on an unfair labor practice charge filed on 18 February 1986 by Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO (Local 430 or the Charging Party) and alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by the withdrawal of recognition from the Charging Party and by failing and refusing to bargain with the Charging Party. The complaint is joined by Respondent's answer in which Respondent denies the commission of any violations of the Act.

On the entire record in this case, including my observations of the demeanor of the witnesses and after due consideration of the briefs filed by counsel for the General Counsel, the Charging Party, and Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT AND ANALYSIS[1]

I. BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

Respondent, a Delaware corporation, with an office and principal place of business in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, has been engaged in the publication, circulation, and distribution of a daily newspaper in Broward County, Florida. During the past 12 months, a representative period of time, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000, and during the same period of time purchased and received at its Fort Lauderdale, Florida facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000, which were shipped to it directly from points located outside the State of Florida. Respondent is now, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE UNION

The complaint alleges, Respondent denies, and I find, that Local 430 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act. This finding is made on the basis of unrebutted testimony presented by the General Counsel and Charging Party through the testimony of International Typographical Union Representative Wimbley Waters[2] and Local 430 Secretary-Treasurer Irwin Radin, concerning the functions of former Local 895 and postmerger Local 430 and their representation of employees in their relationship with employers concerning wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment.

III. THE APPROPRIATE BARGAINING UNIT

The complaint, as amended at the hearing, alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that the appropriate bargaining unit is as follows:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by Respondent performing composing room work, excluding all office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES[3]

Fort Lauderdale Typographical Union Local 895 (Local 895) had a collective-bargaining relationship with Respondent over a period of more than 30 years. The parties had entered into successive labor agreements throughout that period, the most recent of which expired on 30 June 1984. Local 895 and Respondent had held 30 bargaining sessions to negotiate a successor to the agreement that expired in 1984 until impasse was reached in March 1985. On 10 March, Respondent imposed its final bargaining proposal following the impasse after these unsuccessful contract negotiations. The parties next met to negotiate a contract in April 1985 and did not thereafter meet to negotiate a contract until December 1985. In the interim, officers of Local 895 met with International Representative Wimbley Waters in October 1985 and asked that a trusteeship be imposed on Local 895 to commence contract negotiations again with Respondent, to obtain new leadership for Local 895, and also to facilitate a merger of Local 895 with Local 430, according to the unrebutted testimony of Local 85's former secretary-treasurer, Walter Sakowski, who is now a retired member of Local 895. Sakowski testified that Local 895 officers were worn out, and the trusteeship and merger of Local 895 with Local 430 were also sought for the purpose of obtaining new leadership. According to the unrebutted testimony of Sakowski and Local 430's secretary-treasurer, Irwin Radin, the two local unions had also discussed merger in 1983. With the approval of the International Union, the trusteeship was imposed on Local 895 on 9 October 1985 with Wimbley Waters, president of the Daytona local and a part-time international representative, appointed trustee of Local 895, at which time Waters asked all the officers of Local 895 and members of its negotiating committee to remain in their offices, which they did. Within the various locals of the International Union, there are "chapels" that are local committees at particular employers, which form the local. There was such a chapel at the Sun/Sentinel, which had its own dues and maintained its own funds apart and distinct from the local, handled grievances in the early stages, and presented contract proposals for consideration by the Local in preparation for negotiations with Respondent. The chapel chairman served in the role of a chief steward for the chapel members.

[1] The following includes a composite of the testimony of the witnesses, which is credited except as specific credibility resolutions are made.

[2] Waters is also president of Daytona Beach, Florida Local 892, affiliated with the International Typographical Union.

[3] The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the record is granted, and the record is amended as shown on "Appendix A." (Appendix A is omitted from publication.)

On 6 December 1985, Respondent and Local 895 met to engage in negotiations and, at that time, Waters informed Respondent's vice president and director of employee relations, John T. Spran, that he was the trustee of Local 895 and requested and received permission to conduct a merger vote on Respondent's premises on 11 December 1985. The International sent mail ballots to members of Local 895, and Local 895 posted a notice of the merger vote[4] in the composing room of Respondent. The merger was discussed at meetings of Local 895 on 3 November and 8 December 1985. The mail-vote of members of Local 895 yielded a tally of 74 in favor of the merger and 29 opposed to the merger. In addition, nonunion members of the bargaining unit were given ballots and permitted to vote in the composing room on 11 December by placing a ballot in a padlocked box kept by Local 895 Secretary-Treasurer Sakowski at his workplace during the first-day shift, but left unattended for a period 3-1/2 to 4 hours when Sakowski left work and before he returned to collect the ballots after the first shift. One nonunion member employee testified that she gave her ballot to Sakowski to place in the box and assumed that he had done so. The employee testified she trusted Sakowski completely. Sakowski did not recall the incident. I credit the employee's testimony that she gave her ballot to Sakowski. The tally of the jobsite balloting of nonunion members in Local 895's bargaining unit was 41 in favor of the merger and 13 opposed to the merger. The total tally of the vote by Local 895 was 115 in favor of and 32 opposed to the merger. The tally of Local 430's votes on the merger was 79 in favor of and 10 opposed to the merger.

Waters informed Respondent by letter of 17 December 1985 to John T. Spran, Respondent's vice president and employee relations director, that the employees in the bargaining unit had voted in favor of merging with Local 430 by a vote of 115 in favor of the merger and 32 opposed to the merger. In this letter, Waters also requested a meeting to negotiate a new agreement. Waters testified that between 17 December and 27 January 1986, when Respondent sent a letter to him withdrawing recognition from Local 430, he had telephone discussions with Spran and Debbie Dodds, a member of Respondent's negotiating committee, in attempting to set up meeting dates to resume negotiations. During one of these telephone conversations, Waters talked to Spran and asked whether Spran had received the 17 December 1985 letter and whether he had any problems with it. Spran replied that he had received the letter and told Waters that he had no problems with it. Spran told Waters he would send the letter to San Francisco and would have Dodds place Local 430 on the calendar. On 27 January 1986, Spran sent Waters a letter withdrawing recognition as follows:

January 27, 1986

Mr. Wimbley Waters
I.T.U. Appointed Trustee
Ft. Lauderdale Typographical Union
Local #895
P. O. Box 84
Ft. Lauderdale, Fl 33302

Dear Mr. Waters:

We are in receipt of your letter dated December 17, 1985. We understand from your letter that as of January 1, 1986, Fort Lauderdale Typographical Union #895 no longer exists and will no longer represent Composing Room employees of the News/-Sun-Sentinel Company.

We do not believe that Miami Typographical Union #430 legally represents the Composing Room employees of News/Sun-Sentinel Company and, as a consequence, we refuse to recognize and bargain with Local #430 as a representative of those employees.

JTS/dd

/s/ John T. Spran

[4] The notice read as follows:

NOTICE OF ELECTION
REFERENDUM VOTE FOR MERGER BETWEEN MIAMI TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION NO. 430
and
Fort Lauderdale Typographical
Union No. 895

The agreement would merge Fort Lauderdale Typographical Union No. 895 into Miami Typographical Union No. 430.

The election date is Wednesday December 11, 1985—Mail Ballots must be post marked by midnight Wednesday December 11, 1985—Chapel voting must be completed by Midnight Wednesday, December 11, 1985.

On 28 January 1986, Respondent President T. O'Donnell delivered a speech to the composing room employees, he stated as follows:

> On December 17, 1985 we received the following letter from Wimberly [sic] Waters, I.T.U. Appointed Trustee for Fort Lauderdale Typographical Union #895. [Overhead I]
>
> As you can see from this letter, after January 1, 1986 your Union, Fort Lauderdale Typographical Union #895 ceased to exist and, as a consequence, no longer can represent Composing Room employees.
>
> We have sent a letter to Wimberly [sic] Waters acknowledging his letter and telling him that since your Union no longer exists, we consider Composing Room employees to be independent employees. [Overhead II]
>
> We also told Wimberly [sic] Waters, as you can see, that we are not going to accept an outside group from Miami to represent our Composing Room.
>
> As far as I am concerned, the Composing Room should now be like any other independent department of our paper and should receive wage and benefit improvements like other independent departments. As you know, we have had similar situations for the Warehouse, Mailroom, Engravers, Machine Shop and Teamster drivers. In each of these cases, when the department became independent, employees got new dental insurance, increased life insurance options, reduced health insurance and group life costs to employees, improved long term disability benefits, improved Christmas bonus, etc.—benefits that apply to all other independent employees. (Of course those of you with job guarantees would still keep them.)
>
> However, Jack tells me there are still legal questions that need to be sorted out and we have to wait until they are sorted out.
>
> In the meantime, any questions you may have regarding independent employee benefits and policies, talk to Jack. We intend to operate the room as it has operated in the past. However, now your foreman and supervisor will deal directly with you.
>
> We are in the middle of some exciting changes at our paper and I would like to share them with you.
>
> [Insert]
>
> Hopefully, this will all be sorted out soon and I look forward to working with each of you. [Emphasis added.]

Respondent has since refused to recognize and bargain with Local 430 as the collective-bargaining representative of its employees.

At the hearing, the General Counsel and Respondent entered into a stipulation of facts concerning the conduct of the election, which consists of facts and conclusions contained in the Regional Director's original dismissal of the charges following an investigation, and which was received over the objection of the Charging Party and is as follows:

> On December 11, 1985, unit employees, among others, voted to determine whether or not they wanted their collective bargaining representative, Typographical Union Local No. 895 to merge with Miami Typographical Union No. 430, AFL–CIO. Some of the eligible voters (including retirees) received mail ballots directly from the International Union Headquarters in Colorado and other employees voted personally in the December 11 election. The Charging Party maintains the employees, by a vote of 115 to 32, voted in favor of merger and thus it requested the Employer to bargain with Local 430. By letter dated January 27, 1985, the Employer refused the Union's request, stating it did not believe Local 430 legally represented the unit (composing room) employees. The investigation revealed several improprieties in the voting procedure, and although no employee made a specific complaint concerning the conduct of the election, some employees did testify with respect to those improprieties. For example, the eligibility list used by the Union reveals that 40 composing room employees were given ballots and 36 returned them and placed them in the ballot box. However, the tally of ballots for the composing room shows 41 for merger and 3 against. Further, by the union official's admission, there is no way of knowing if employees in the composing room who voted in person also received a mail ballot from the Union's Headquarters in Colorado, thereby creating the possibility of permitting one voter to cast two ballots. One employee testified he was given a ballot by the union official holding the election and that he placed his ballot in the box, but according to the eligibility list he did not personally cast a ballot but rather he received a mail ballot from the International Union. Further, one employee stated that she chose not to vote, and therefore did not cast a ballot, but the eligibility list indicates that the employee was given a ballot and did vote. In addition, the ballot box with only a piece of tape over the opening was left in the Employer's maintenance room unattended from approximately 3:50 p.m. to 7 or 8 p.m. on the day the voting took place. Under these circumstances, it is concluded that irregularities in the voting procedure preclude conferral of representative status upon Local 430 on the basis of the December 11 election and that, therefore, the Employer did not violate the Act by refusing to recognize and bargain with the Charging Party.

A. Analysis

The complaint alleges that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to recognize and bargain with Local 430, the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees engaged in composing room work following the merger of Local 430 and Local 895 effective 1 Januray 1986. Several issues concerning this allegations were litigated at the hearing as follows:

1. Whether the 11 December 1985 merger was subject to due process safeguards which had been previously imposed by the Board or whether the recent Supreme Court decision of NLRB v. Financial Institution Employees (Seattle-First National Bank), 475 U.S. 192, 121 LRRM 2741 (1986), hereinafter referred to as Seattle-First, precludes the Board from conducting its due process inquiry into internal union matters such as mergers.

2. Whether the merger should be upheld in the event the Board has the authority to inquire into the due process requirements and in the event that the Board's due process standards are found not to have been met.

3. Whether there was substantial continuity of identity between pre-merger union, Local 895, and post-merger union, Local 430, sufficient to give rise to a continuing duty by Respondent to recognize and bargain with Local 430.

Respondent has also raised as a defense that Local 895 was defunct prior to the alleged merger with Local 430 and that there was therefore no union in existence to be merged with Local 430 and thus no continuity and no valid merger.

1. The due process issue

The General Counsel and Charging Party contend that the Board is precluded from inquiring into whether the merger election met due process safeguards as part of its traditional two-prong test to determine whether an employer is required to bargain with a union following a merger, but is now limited to the second part of the test (i.e., whether there was substantial "continuity" of identity between the pre and postmerger unions). Both the General Counsel and Charging Party contend that Seattle-First stands for the proposition that the Board has no authority under the Act to inquire into union affiliations and other "internal union matters," such as mergers, but rather is limited to determining whether there was a lack of substantial continuity of identity between the pre and postmerger unions that give rise to a question of representation under the Act in order to invoke the Board's authority under the Act to hold elections and certify collective-bargaining representatives. Respondent contends that Seattle-First is limited to its facts and holding that the Board may not relieve the employer of its bargaining liability on the basis of a lack of due process finding because nonmembers were not allowed to vote in an affiliation election, and the Supreme Court expressly declined to address the question whether other due process requirements had been met by the affiliating unions in that case, thus giving support to the argument that the Supreme Court recognized that other due process standards must be met in matters such as affiliations, and particularly mergers that were not involved in that case. Respondent also cites a recent Board case, Fimco, Inc., 282 NLRB 653 (1987), in which the Board states that the Supreme Court "has recently held that the Act does not require that nonmembers be allowed to vote in affiliation elections. We, accordingly, reject the Respondent's contention as without merit. The Respondent presents no other basis for contending that the Union did not provide adequate due process safeguard." (Emphasis added.) From the underlined sentence, Respondent contends that the Board, itself, has given a more limited reading of Seattle-First and suggests that it will continue to consider alleged due process violations other than contentions concerning the voting rights of nonmembers.

In its recent supplemental decision on review in Hammond Publishers, 286 NLRB 49 (1987), which involved an employer's challenge to an amendment of certification following an affiliation election on due process grounds and on a lack of continuity between a pre and postaffiliation bargaining representative, the Board applied its traditional two-prong test, concluded that the due process and continuity requirements had been met, and found it unnecessary to address the issue whether both parts of the test must be met in affiliation cases. The Board stated at 50:

> The Board has traditionally required that two conditions be met before it will grant a petition for the amendment of certification based on an affiliation or merger. First, the Board requires that the vote itself occur under circumstances satisfying minimum due process and . . . continuity between the pre- and post-affiliation bargaining representative. [Emphasis added.]

In the Hammond case at fn. 8, the Board also noted that the Supreme Court in Seattle-First "acknowledged the Board's traditional two-part test but did not have to reach the question of whether both continuity of representation and due process must be satisfied in all affiliation cases." In the Hammond case, the Board likewise found it unnecessary to address this issue as it found that both the due process and continuity requirements had been satisfied. Under the facts of the instant case, I find that the due process and continuity of representation requirements have been met as set out, and I thus find it unecessary to address the issue of whether both continuity of representation and due process must be satisfied in a merger case.

With respect to whether the merger election satisfies minimum due process, Respondent has the burden of establishing an irregularity in the voting process as it is Respondent that is relying on the irregularity as justification for its refusal to bargain. Insulfab Plastics, 274 NLRB 817 (1985). In the instant case, I find that Respondent has failed to establish that the procedures used in the vote were so irregular or so unmindful of due process as to invalidate the election. Hammond Publishers, supra; East Dayton Tool & Die Co., 190 NLRB 577 (1971). Thus, the evidence in this case established that both members and nonmembers were permitted to vote at the merger election, that notice of the merger vote was posted on the bulletin board in the composing room where all employees worked, that union meetings were in November and December before the merger vote on 11 December 1985 at which the merger was discussed, and that Local 895 Trustee Waters obtained permission of Respondent's representative, Vice President of Personnel Spran, to conduct the vote on its premises. Ballots were mailed to members by the International, and nonmembers were given ballots for voting in the composing room by Local 895 Secretary-Treasurer Sakowski. The vote was overwhelmingly in favor of merger. Although the ballot box for in-person voting of nonmembers was left unattended, It was padlocked according to the testimony of Sakowski, which I credit in this regard over that of Composing Room Manager John McClusky who testified that he did not recall seeing a padlock. Respondent offered no evidence even suggesting that the ballot box or its contents had been tampered with. The only employee who allegedly refused the right to vote was a supervisor, and he had not presented himself to vote but, rather, merely called out to Sakowski and inquired as Sakowski was leaving why he had not been permitted to vote, to which Sakowski replied, "because you are a supervisor."

I find that none of the alleged discrepancies affected the outcome of the election. It is clear that the overwhelming majority of members of Local 895 voted in favor of the merger by returning the mailed ballots in sealed envelopes that were counted separately, according to the unrebutted testimony of Sakowski, which I credit and which showed a total of 74 in favor of the merger and 29 opposed to the merger. Thus, even if all the ballots cast in the composing room were not counted, there was an overwhelming majority in favor of the merger. Moreover, as discussed supra under Seattle-First, there was no requirement that nonmembers be permitted to vote to validate the merger election, and the composing room balloting was for the purpose of allowing nonmembers who did not receive mailed ballots to vote. Assuming that one or more members may have voted in the composing room rather than utilize their mail ballot, or even assuming arguendo, they voted in the composing room in addition to voting by mail, the election outcome would not have been affected. Further, there was no evidence that any member did not receive his ballot or was otherwise deprived of the right to cast his ballot. There was no evidence presented that the mail balloting was tainted in any manner whatsoever. Further, with the possible exception of Norma Scheer, a nonmember who gave her ballot to Sakowski whom she stated she trusted completely, although she did not observe him place it in the ballot box, there was no evidence presented that the vote was not secret. I place no reliance or credit on the testimony of Personnel Vice President Spran who testified that he heard the vote was not secret from McClusky and others. Furthermore, McClusky did not contend that the vote was not secret in his own testimony.

With respect to Respondent's contention that it has met its burden of proof sufficiently to shift the burden of proof to the General Counsel in order to prove that the vote occurred under circumstances satisfying minimum due process, I find that this contention is without merit. Initially, I do not find that the alleged discrepancies were so egregious as to shift the burden of proof. In the recent Hammond Publishers case, the Board addressed an allegation that an unattended ballot was sufficient to support a finding that an election did not meet due process and, rejecting that contention, specifically noted, as in the instant case, that there was no evidence of any tampering with the ballot box. I similarly do not find the other alleged due process deficiencies, such as the refusal to permit an admitted supervisor to vote or the handling of a single ballot of a single employee, to cast doubt on the election process. Nor do I find that the alleged defunctness, discussed infra, of Local 895 casts doubt on Local 430's majority status. I thus do not find Royal Coach Lines v. NLRB, 838 F.2d 47 (2d Cir. 1988),[6] to be controlling under the facts of this case even assuming the Board adopts the rationale of that case with respect to the shifting of burden of proof from Respondent to the General Counsel.

The record also shows no evidence of any challenge by any employee to the conduct of the election. Respondent's attempt to inject a decertification petition filed by an employee in February 1986 was rejected. It is clear that at the time of Respondent's refusal to recognize and bargain with Local 430 there was no evidence of employee dissatisfaction with the merger election process. Furthermore, the decertification petition was filed following a speech by Respondent's president after Respondent's refusal to recognize and bargain with Local president after Respondent's refusal to recognize and bargain with Local 430, and in that speech Respondent's president made implicit promises of improvements in the unit employees' wages and benefits once Respondent no longer had to deal with a union, but could deal independently with the employees.

2. Respondent's defunctness defense

As part of its defense to its refusal to bargain, Respondent has alleged that Local 895 was defunct and thus there was no union for Local 430 to merge with. I find no merit to this defense as the evidence clearly shows that Local 895 and Respondent had an ongoing bargaining relationship for a period of over 30 years, entering into a series of successive collective-bargaining agreements until they reached impasse in January 1985 and met again in April 1985 without success. Local 895's alleged lack of activity between April and 6 December 1985, when Waters (who had been appointed trustee of Local 895 in October 1985) met with the Respondent, did not establish that the Union was defunct. Former secretary-treasurer, Sakowski, testified that the current union leadership was tired and no new leadership could be found. The Local thus sought a trusteeship in order to eliminate the contract stalemate, better serve the members, and to facilitate a merger. Merger discussions were held between officials of Local 895 and Local 430 in October 1986, and approval was obtained from the International organization to commerce preparing for and to conducting merger elections, which were duly conducted. None of the foregoing establishes that the Union was defunct or unwilling or unable to represent its membership. Rather, the evidence discloses that the Union sought the trusteeship and the merger in order to bring fresh leadership to the Union and to eliminate the impasse in contractual negotiations and work for a new contract. Moreover, Respondent carries the burden of proof in the assertion of its defense and failed to present any evidence of the unwillingness or inability of Local 895 to serve its members, such as to shift this burden of proof to the General Counsel or to otherwise prove its defense. Yates Industries, 264 NLRB 1237, 1250 (1982); Pioneer Inn Associates, 228 NLRB 1263, 1264 (1977); Hershey Chocolate Corp., 121 NLRB 901, 911 (1958); Kent Corp., 272 NLRB 735 (1984).

[6] Respondent brought this case to my attention by a postbrief letter.

3. The continuity issue

I find that the evidence establishes that Local 430 is the legitimate successor and collective-bargaining representative of Local 895 as the result of the valid merger vote of Local 430 and Local 895 on 11 December 1985 and their subsequent merger effective on 1 January 1986.

I find that the evidence supports a finding of continuity between premerger Local 895 and postmerger Local 430. It is undisputed that two members of Local 895's executive board were appointed members of the executive board of Local 430 on the effective date of the merger, and that less than a month later former Local 895 recording secretary Mel Field was appointed as recording secretary of Local 430 on the resignation of the incumbent secretary. In addition, the chapel, composed of Sun-Sentinel bargaining unit employees, remained in existence and continued in its role to have responsibility for the processing of grievances and the administration of the labor agreement. I make this determination notwithstanding the lack of recognition accorded Local 430 by Respondent and lack of a collective-bargaining agreement in existence. Moreover, the chapel continued to elect its own officers, collect its own dues, and maintain its own assets, savings, and checking accounts. In addition, the chapel continued to have responsibility for input into the collective-bargaining process. Waters testified contract ratification votes, while a Local 430 matter, would routinely be voted on only by the employees of the particular employer with whom a contract is being negotiated. In addition, while the constitution and bylaws of premerger Local 895 became those of postmerger Local 430, they were substantially similar to those of premerger Local 895. The dues structure of Local 895 was also identical to that of postmerger Local 430. Moreover, members of Local 895 were accorded the same rights and privileges of membership after the merger as they had before the merger.

In making its determination whether there has been substantial continuity between a premerger and postmerger union, the Board makes its determination on the "totality of a situation" rather than reliance on "the presence or absence of certain cited criteria." Yates Industries, supra. I find that the totality of the circumstances in this case fully supports a finding of substantial continuity between premerger Local 895 and postmerger Local 430. I find that the General Counsel has shown that there was substantial continuity between Locals 895 and 430 following the merger. Conversely, I find Respondent has failed to demonstrate a lack of continuity between Local 895 and Local 430. Insulfab Plastics, supra at 821. See also Quemetco, Inc., 226 NLRB 1398 (1976), in which the Board held the choice of representation by employees is of paramount importance over the continuity of representation.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, News/Sun-Sentinel Company, is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Charging Party, Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. At all times material, Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO has been the exclusive representative for purposes of collective bargaining in the following described appropriate unit for collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by Respondent performing composing room work, excluding all office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. By its withdrawal of recognition from Local 430 and its refusal to bargain with Local 430, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices have a close, intimate, and substantial effect on the free flow of commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has committed certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative actions designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act, including the posting of an appropriate notice. I shall recommend it be required to recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO. In the absence of a showing of any special circumstances that would warrant the inclusion of a visitatorial clause, I decline the General Counsel's request to include one as part of the remedy. Cherokee Marine Terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[6]

ORDER

The Respondent, News/Sun-Sentinel Company, Fort Lauderdale, Florida, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International

[6] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Typographical Union, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining unit representative of its composing room employees employed by Respondent at its Fort Lauderdale, Florida newspaper in Broward County, Florida.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies and purposes of the Act.

(a) Recognize and bargain collectively with Miami Typographical Union No. 430 a/w International Typographical Union, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the composing room employees employed by Respondent at its newspaper facility in Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, Florida.

(b) Post at its Fort Lauderdale, Florida newspaper facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 12, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[7] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Sil-Base Company and Aluminum, Brick and Glass Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, Petitioner. Case 6–RC–9899

September 21, 1988

DECISION AND CERTIFICATION OF REPRESENTATIVE

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered objections to an election held September 14, 1987, and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of ballots shows 13 for and 2 against the Petitioner, with 3 challenged ballots, an insufficient number to affect the results.

On September 28, 1987, the Employer filed timely objections and on October 9, 1987, the Acting Regional Director for Region 6 issued an order directing hearing on objections and notice of hearing. A hearing was held on October 28 and November 2, 1987. On December 11, 1987, the hearing officer filed his report recommending that the objections be overruled and that a certification of representative be issued. The Employer filed exceptions and a supporting brief and the Petitioner filed a brief in opposition to the Employer's exceptions.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and briefs, has adopted the hearing officer's findings [1] and recommendations, as modified, and finds that a certification of representative should be issued.

In his report, the hearing officer erred by stating that DiPerna's union activity was limited to attending organizational meetings.[2] The testimony shows that DiPerna also made prounion statements at the meetings.[3] Even assuming that DiPerna is a supervisor, however, his prounion conduct does not warrant setting aside the election.

There are three situations in which a supervisor's prounion conduct may warrant setting aside an election. The first is when the employer takes no stand contrary to the supervisor's prounion conduct, and employees may be led to believe the employer favors the union.[4] The second involves the possibility that a supervisor's prounion conduct could coerce employees into supporting the union out of fear of future retaliation by that supervisor.[5] The third is similar to the second situation except that instead of coercion by fear of retaliation the employees could be coerced out of a hope of reward by the supervisor.[6] In assessing whether a supervisor's conduct could reasonably tend to coerce employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights the Board evaluates "the ability of a supervisor both to reward and retaliate against employees"[7] and the extent of the supervisor's prounion conduct.

The Employer claims that DiPerna's prounion conduct, combined with his alleged ability to discipline employees and assign employees to the undesirable work of fiberglassing, coerced the employees into supporting the Union.[8] We disagree.

The Employer's argument that DiPerna exercised authority over the entire unit by virtue of his ability to transfer employees into the departments [9] he allegedly supervised[10] is without foundation.[11]

---

[1] The Employer has excepted to some of the hearing officer's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule a hearing officer's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Stretch-Tex Co., 118 NLRB 1359, 1361 (1957). We find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] The testimony shows there were approximately six meetings and that DiPerna attended approximately four of the six.

[3] Additionally, employee Wall stated DiPerna was one of the most active union supporters. He also stated, however, that DiPerna was not a leader of the union movement. DiPerna also admitted that he had offered employee VanNatta a ride to one of the union meetings.

[4] There is no such allegation in this case.

[5] Cal-Western Transport, 283 NLRB 453 (1987).

[6] Ibid.

[7] Ibid.

[8] The Employer also asserts that DiPerna had the authority to effectively recommend hiring. That is not proved. DiPerna denied he had this authority and stated that he merely showed applicants around the pattern department and, on instructions from owner Suey, had applicants cut a pattern to see how comfortable they were performing the cutting. DiPerna stated he gave his opinion as to which applicant was most comfortable cutting the pattern only on being asked by Suey. He also testified that he did not recommend the hiring of any particular employee. Given DiPerna's position as the only employee in the pattern shop and as the employee with the experience at pattern cutting, DiPerna's role in the hiring process, like his role in the shop generally, could just as well have derived from his experiences and skills as it could from any supervisory authority that might have been granted to him by the Employer. In short, a finding that he is a leadman is as tenable as one that he is a supervisor, based on the evidence here.

[9] The Employer claims that DiPerna was a supervisor in both its pattern and quality control departments. DiPerna denied that he was a supervisor in either department. Again, it appears that any authority he may have exercised in the pattern department could have stemmed from his position as the longest serving employee in that department—which consisted of one or two permanently assigned employees (including DiPerna). See infra, fn. 14. Even if we assume that DiPerna was the supervisor of the employees permanently assigned to both the pattern and quality control departments, however, DiPerna still would have had supervisory authority over, at most, two employees out of an approximately 16-employee unit. In this regard, we note that many of the Employer's examples of DiPerna's exercise of supervisory authority involve employees who, at the time DiPerna is alleged to have exercised his supervisory authority, were assigned permanently to the pattern department.

[10] Shop Supervisor Holmes testified that approximately six or seven employees had helped DiPerna in the pattern department during the previous year.

[11] Although evidence that DiPerna could transfer employees into the departments he allegedly supervised would show a greater potential for coercion by him, it would not be determinative in this case, given DiPerna's limited prounion conduct. See infra, 7–9.

It appears that on occasion employees are transferred into the department in which DiPerna worked to assist DiPerna. However, the testimony indicates that one of the other departmental supervisors—not DiPerna—selected the employee who would assist DiPerna.[12] Also, DiPerna credibly denied that he had veto power over the employees chosen to help him.[13] Consequently, DiPerna's inability to select the employees he might want to reward or punish diminishes any coercive impact his alleged supervisory authority might otherwise have had.

Regarding the assignment of fiberglassing work, while DiPerna stated he had the authority to assign employees to fiberglassing or patternmaking,[14] he also testified that he rarely was given help for anything other than fiberglassing. The record reveals that fiberglassing requires only 5 minutes of training, whereas patternmaking requires greater skill. Because DiPerna was given help only to speed up production, as a practical matter he had virtually no discretion to assign work in order to retaliate against or reward employees based on their union views.

Regarding discipline, the Employer does not claim that DiPerna can take disciplinary action himself but instead asserts that DiPerna can recommend discipline.[15] In this regard the only example cited by the Employer is Holmes' testimony that DiPerna recommended that employee Flohr be fired. DiPerna denied having such authority and explained his purported recommendation to have Flohr fired as nothing more than a description of Flohr's work, from which he himself drew no conclusions concerning Flohr's retention.[16] Moreover, Supervisor Holmes stated that he would review any disciplinary recommendation made by DiPerna "to make sure everything was fair." Consequently, even examining the evidence in the light most favorable to the Employer, we find that the limited number of employees DiPerna controlled because of his inability to select employees for transfer, his lack of real choice in assigning work, and his lack of independent authority to punish employees diminish the coercive impact of whatever supervisory authority DiPerna held.

Nor does it appear that DiPerna had any significant authority to reward employees, which in turn might coerce them into voting for the Union to seek favor with DiPerna. Thus, the employees' wage rates were set by Owner Suey and remained the same when employees transferred among departments.[17] Further, the one example the Employer cited of DiPerna's authority to send employees home early was denied by DiPerna.[18] Moreover, Plant Supervisor Holmes stated that supervisors usually cleared an "early out" with him before letting an employee go home. The Employer also stated that although DiPerna could not grant overtime he could effectively recommend it. Again, DiPerna denies this; in any event, Holmes stated that the recommendation had to be cleared through Suey. Thus, it appears that to the extent DiPerna had authority to reward employees, that authority could be exercised only in circumstances that would effectively minimize any hope on the part of an employee of unmerited reward.

Even if it is true that DiPerna had the supervisory authority ascribed to him by the Employer, in order for that authority to reasonably create fear of retaliation or hope of reward, the employees would have to be aware that DiPerna had that authority. As the hearing officer found, however, there is no indication that the employees had been advised of such authority.[19]

Further, even if we assume that DiPerna had supervisory authority and that the employees were aware of his authority, DiPerna's prounion actions have not been "so marked or inordinate as to lead

[12] DiPerna testified that if management pressed him to get a job done he would ask for help. Sometimes he got help, sometimes he did not. He also stated that even when he received help the other departmental supervisors could recall their employees from the pattern department even though the employees had not completed their work in that department.

[13] DiPerna explained the one example of this alleged veto power cited by the Employer by noting that he merely had asked employee Beyers' supervisor, after Beyers had been selected to help DiPerna, to tell Beyers about the mistake he had made while fiberglassing during an earlier stint in the pattern department. Beyers subsequently has helped DiPerna in the pattern department.

[14] DiPerna attributed this authority to his experience in the pattern department.

[15] Plant Supervisor Holmes did state that DiPerna could take disciplinary action on his own "for something real serious." Holmes also testified, however, that no "real serious" incidents occurred in which DiPerna used this purported authority.

[16] DiPerna specifically denied recommending that Flohr (who at the time was assigned permanently to the pattern department) be fired. DiPerna stated that Holmes asked him how Flohr was doing and that DiPerna told Holmes that Flohr did a pretty good job on some things and that he was lacking in others. DiPerna denied saying anything to Holmes about whether Flohr should continue to work in the department. Holmes' questioning of DiPerna about Flohr, again, can be attributed to DiPerna's experience in the pattern department and that he was the only other employee in the department. The hearing officer did not discuss this evidence. We note, however, that the hearing officer found DiPerna "to be a truthful and forthright witness."

[17] In this regard, Plant Supervisor Holmes stated that DiPerna could recommend pay raises. He also stated that DiPerna had evaluated Flohr—citing the same incident he used to demonstrate DiPerna's alleged authority to recommend discipline of employees (see fn. 16 above). Holmes further stated, however, that he was not sure if DiPerna had ever been told he was supposed to evaluate employees.

[18] Holmes stated that DiPerna had requested that employee Vitale (who at the time was assigned permanently to the pattern department) be allowed to leave work early because his father was dying. According to DiPerna's version, however, DiPerna merely informed Holmes that Vitale was leaving because of his father's health status. DiPerna denied ever telling Vitale that he could go home early.

[19] Employee Wall testified that DiPerna's job was to build patterns and that he was unaware of DiPerna ever disciplining or hiring employees.

the employees to fear possible retribution at [DiPerna's] hands in the event that they reject the Union."[20] The testimony shows that DiPerna's statements[21] made at union meetings were in response to employee questions asking what DiPerna thought of the organizing effort. DiPerna stated that the employees were interested in his opinion on this matter because he had worked for the Employer longer than any other employee. In these circumstances, the prounion statements are nothing more than personal opinions that were expressed without any hint of retaliation or reward.[22] Nor does the assessment of employee Wall, given in response to a leading question, that DiPerna was one of the most active employees supporting the Union require us to set aside the election. Despite that assessment, Wall's testimony indicates only that DiPerna attended union meetings and made the statements described at length in footnote 21, supra. Finally, DiPerna's offer to give a fellow employee a ride to one of the union meetings is not the type of activity that requires invalidating the election.

CERTIFICATION OF REPRESENTATIVE

IT IS CERTIFIED that a majority of the valid ballots have been cast for Aluminum, Brick and Glass Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC and that it is the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed by Sil-Base Company at its Juniper Street, McKeesport, Pennsylvania facility, who were employed during the payroll period ending August 14, 1987, excluding all office clerical employees, salespersons and guards, professional employees and supervisors as defined in the Act.

---

[20] Stevenson Equipment Co., 174 NLRB 865, 866 (1969).

[21] DiPerna's testimony regarding the statements he made is as follows:

Q. Did you make statements in favor of the union to people who worked at Sil-Base?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. What did you tell them.

A. I just told them, I says, hey, you know, they were—see, they asked me because I had the most time in, they just says, you know, what do you think. I says, hey, just, you know, look how long I've been here and we don't have much to go on. I mean, we should be making more than what we are as far as wages and, you know. Everybody feels the same way, you know, that's all there is to it.

Q. Well, did you tell them anything else?

A. No. That's, you know, basically . . . .

Q. Did you give them any other reasons why they should join the union?

A. No.

Q. You just left it with . . . .

A. The only thing—I just said, hey, if, you know,—they came to me and said they were starting, okay, and I just—I says find, I'll show up at meeting. And I went and then, like I said, they were asking me and I just says I've been there a long time and it's just what I saw. And they all felt that—the way they feel about their wage and everything, that's their own opinion, I. . . .

Q. I am asking you what you said?

A. I just told them the only thing is make sure, if you want this, that everybody sticks together.

Q. Did you tell them why not—why they had to stick together?

A. No. I just says because if you don't stick together then it's not going to go through. If you start it and don't finish it, then nothing's ever going to get accomplished.

Q. Okay, Now, did you do anything else in support of the union?

A. No.

[22] See NLRB v. Hawaiian Flour Mill, 792 F.2d 1459, 1464 (9th Cir. 1986), enfg. 274 NLRB 1108 (1985). See also Fall River Savings Bank, 246 NLRB 831, 832 (1979) ("Speculation is not to be substituted for evidence of coercion or fear in finding an improper effect on an election."), enfd. 649 F.2d 50 (1st Cir. 1981). Compare Sheraton Motor Inn, 194 NLRB 733 (1971) (Board set aside election where supervisor, inter alia, was union's "contact man" during the organizational campaign and told employees that management intended to cut wages if employees did not vote for the union); Delchamps, Inc., 210 NLRB 179 (1974) (Board vacated election when supervisors, inter alia, solicited employees under their control to join the union, sat on the petitioner's organizing committee, and urged employees to attend union meetings and vote for the petitioner.)

Texaco, Inc. and John T. Dumesnil, W. P. Schulze, Jack Hart, and Melvin R. Laughlin and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO, and Locals 4–23 and 4–367, Parties to the Contracts. Cases 23–CA–7929, 23–CA–7938–1, 23–CA–7938–2, and 23–CA–7938–4

September 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On September 14, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Richard D. Taplitz issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions only to the extent consistent with this Decision and Order.

Since the early 1940s OCAW Locals 4–367 and 4–23 have represented certain hourly paid employees at, respectively, the Respondent's Houston and Port Arthur facilities. The most recent collective-bargaining agreements involved here were effective from January 8, 1979, to January 7, 1981. The agreements provided that negotiations could be reopened on certain items. They also preserved the Locals' right to strike no earlier than January 8, 1980,[1] if the parties failed to reach agreement on the reopened items. Each Local invoked the reopener but agreements were not reached by January 8. Local 4–23, on January 8, and Local 4–367, on January 30, began lawful economic strikes. The Respondent thereupon suspended, because of the strikes, payment of accident and sick (A&S) benefits to disabled employees who had been receiving them when the strikes began.

On February 11, the Respondent gave the Houston employees written notice of information previously given Local 4–367 regarding its last prestrike offers as to a number of employee benefits. Concerning the discontinued A&S benefits, the notice contained the following announcement:

> Decision will . . . be reserved regarding the resumption of A&S benefits which were discontinued at the beginning of the strike for those employees who are still disabled after the termination of the strike.

On April 28, the Respondent and Local 4–23 signed a "Memorandum of Agreement" that memorialized their settlement of the economic dispute that had led to the strike and, in addition, their settlement of disputes over the Respondent's administration of its employee benefit plans during the strike. They also signed a separate "Strike Settlement Agreement." A few days earlier, the Respondent and Local 4–367 had settled the Houston strike by means of a similar "Memorandum of Agreement." The charges that led to the instant complaint were filed by the individual Charging Parties on various dates in May.

The judge concluded that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by withholding benefits under its A&S benefit plan from employees on the commencement of the lawful economic strikes when such employees were eligible for those benefits. We agree with the judge's findings underlying this conclusion for the reasons set forth in section I, below. However, we shall dismiss the complaint based on our finding that the settlement agreements constituted effective waivers by the Locals of the affected employees' entitlements to the A&S benefits at issue. The facts and analysis supporting the dismissal are set forth in section II of this Decision and Order.

I.

The judge, relying on Emerson Electric Co., 246 NLRB 1143 (1979), found a violation based in part on the fact that the disabled employees had not enmeshed themselves in the strikes. In Conoco, Inc., 265 NLRB 819 (1982), however, decided after the judge's decision, the Board held that a disabled employee's participation in a strike no longer disqualifies or limits entitlement to reimbursement for accident or sick benefits withheld by an employer because of a lawful strike.

In Texaco, Inc., 285 NLRB 241 (1987), the Board reaffirmed the abandonment in Conoco of the Emerson Electric remedial limitation and, going further, overruled the Emerson Electric theory of 8(a)(3) and (1) violations. We held in Texaco that the lawfulness of the discontinuance of benefit payments to disabled employees on commencement of a strike will be resolved by application of the test set forth in NLRB v. Great Dane Trailers, 388 U.S. 26 (1967). Thus, the General Counsel can meet the Great Dane burden of showing an adverse effect on employee rights by showing that a benefit withheld because of a strike was an accrued benefit. At that point the employer may be able to defend its action by showing that it had a legitimate and substantial business justification for the cutting off of benefits such as an explicit waiver by the union or the employer's reliance on a nondiscriminatory contract interpretation that is reasonable and arguably correct. See Texaco, Inc., supra at 244–246.

[1] All dates are in 1980 unless otherwise specified.

We find that here the Respondent withheld an accrued benefit and did so on the basis of the strike to the detriment of the employees' right to engage in a lawful economic strike. The Respondent's A&S benefit plan exists independent of any collective-bargaining agreement and covers all of its regular employees (with exceptions not pertinent here), whether represented by a union or not. The collective-bargaining agreements that were in effect at the facilities involved in this proceeding at the time of the strikes incorporated the A&S benefit plan and obligated the Respondent not to discontinue or reduce benefits under the plan, for employees covered by the agreements, during the term of the agreements.

Eligibility for nonoccupational illness or injury benefits under the plan was established by a minimum of 1 year of "active, continuous, and exclusive service with the Company." The employees whose withheld A&S benefits are the subject of this proceeding were all covered by the collective-bargaining agreement and were actually receiving benefits when the Respondent discontinued them under a general policy of not paying these benefits during a strike. As we found in Texaco, Inc., supra at 246–247, which involved the same A&S benefits plan as the one at issue here, the benefits withheld were accrued benefits. Their discontinuance on the basis of the strikes warrants the inference of discriminatory intent and this constitutes a violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) unless the Respondent has sustained its burden of proving a legitimate and substantial business justification. Texaco, Inc. is also controlling on the validity of the principal business justification asserted in both cases, a nondiscriminatory contract interpretation. As in Texaco, Inc. (at 247–248), we here reject the contention that any reasonable and arguably correct interpretation of the A&S benefits plan permitted the Respondent to disqualify those employees acknowledged to have been eligible for A&S benefits pending their notifying the Respondent and establishing that their continued absence was not due to the strikes. Thus far, then, the Respondent's position does not support a claim of a legitimate and substantial business justification for the cessation of benefits.

II.

We find merit, however, in that portion of the Respondent's defense to the General Counsel's prima facie case that claims that the strike settlement agreements executed by the Locals, and then ratified by the employees, clearly and unmistakably waived the employees' statutory right to be free of discrimination or coercion in the receipt of contractual benefits.

Each of the two memoranda of agreement was "in full and complete settlement of all issues negotiated." Each settlement included a provision entitled "Lump Sum Payment" that stated that:

> In consideration of the Union's agreement to withdraw all contractual grievances and NLRB charges and court proceedings arising out of the Company's administration of employee plans during the strike, and the Union's agreement not to institute any further actions arising out of said circumstances, the Company agrees to provide [a payment of up to $150 to all employees to cover premiums for the hospital-surgical-major medical benefits plan assumed by the employees during the strike].

Immediately following this provision, under the heading "Accident and Sick Benefits," the parties agreed, in relevant part, that:

> . . . for employees who were disabled before the strike began and receiving A&S benefits, such benefits shall be resumed at the time the strike is officially discontinued if satisfactory evidence of continuing disability is established.

An additional "Strike Settlement Agreement" admitted into evidence with respect to the Port Arthur unit obligated each party to dismiss any litigation pending against the other, specifically including "arbitrations, unfair labor practice charges, law suits and grievances" related to any of the benefit plans, and to promise that "no new litigation growing out of or related to the strike will be filed."

In Energy Cooperative, 290 NLRB 635 (1988), the Board addresses a question left open in Texaco and held that waivers of contractual benefits contained in strike settlements may result in dismissal of charges filed by individual employees over the denial of such benefits. Thus, a collective-bargaining representative may waive its individual members' statutory rights to receive contractual benefits free from discrimination or coercion. See the discussion of Metropolitan Edison Co. v. NLRB, 460 U.S. 693 (1983), and Ford Motor Co. v. Huffman, 345 U.S. 330 (1953), in Energy Cooperative, supra at 636. Energy Cooperative emphasized Texaco's holding that such a waiver is effective only if it is clear and unmistakable. For the following reasons, we find such a clear and unmistakable waiver here.

According to the parties, their memorandum of agreement was "in full and complete settlement of all issues negotiated." Among these issues was the Respondent's administration of its employee benefit plans, which included the A&S benefits plan at issue in this case. It was expressly in return for the Union's relinquishment of all existing or future claims with regard to employee benefits during the strike that the Respondent provided a limited payment to all employees (including those who were sick or disabled during the strike) for certain insurance contributions under the provision of the agreement entitled "Lump Sum Payment." Thus this provision clearly resolves any claims with respect to employee benefits for the period of the strike.

Further, the "Lump Sum Payment" provision is followed immediately by the one entitled "Accident and Sick Benefits" in which the parties agreed that receipt of normal disability benefits would resume after the strike ended. With this provision they resolved any differences they might have had concerning the employees' entitlement to disability pay during the strike. The parties' agreement that benefits would be resumed after the strike ended clearly reflects the assumption that these benefits were not payable during the strike. That provision must be read in conjunction with the provision that precedes it and with the memorandum as a whole. Thus, the A&S provision makes sense only as part of the complete resolution of all matters regarding contractual employee benefits affected by the strike.[2]

This understanding is reinforced as to the Port Arthur Local by the language of the additional "Strike Settlement Agreement" forswearing "any and all litigation . . . including [that] related to any of the benefit plans," as well as "new litigation growing out of or related to the strike."[3]

Thus, we conclude that the parties' settlement agreements establish that the Locals clearly and unmistakably waived their sick and disabled employees' right to receive contractual A&S benefits for the duration of the strike.[4]

Finally, for the reasons set forth in Texaco and Energy Cooperative, we shall give effect to these strike settlement agreements that we have found met the demanding standard of clearly and unmistakably waiving the statutory right of individual employees to receive contractual benefits free from discrimination. It effectuates the purposes and policies of the Act to give effect to a private settlement amicably resolving a labor dispute where the union was entitled to waive individual rights in securing the good of the entire unit and was empowered to bind unit members wholly apart from their separate consent. Accordingly, we shall dismiss the complaint.[5]

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed.

[2] We note that no extrinsic evidence was offered regarding the bargaining history of the A&S settlement provision.

[3] As stated above, all the instant charges were filed after the date of the Port Arthur "Strike Settlement Agreement."

[4] That the Houston Local was aware of the A&S issue and understood that the settlement agreement was intended to resolve it is reinforced by the close relationship between the employee benefits language in the memorandum of agreement and the Respondent's earlier notice to the Local and the employees concerning discontinuance of a number of employee benefits, specifically including A&S benefits, during the strike.

Member Cracraft would not rely on either the zipper clause contained in the letter of agreement, or the provision providing for resumption of benefits at the end of the strike as evidence of the parties' intent that individuals' rights to A&S benefits were waived. Rather, in agreeing with her colleagues that the Union waived the employees' contractually provided A&S benefits during the term of the strike, Member Cracraft relies on the language of the lump-sum payment section of the strike settlement agreement in which the parties agreed on a specific lump-sum payment in consideration for the Union's relinquishment of all claims arising from the Respondent's "administration of employee plans during the strike" to find such a waiver.

[5] Given our disposition of this case, we find it unnecessary to address the General Counsel's exception to the judge's denial of the motion to amend the complaint to include approximately 120 names as employees who were affected by the withholding of A&S benefits in a manner similar to the effect on those named in the amended complaint.

Chairman Stephens notes that none of the factors discussed in his concurring opinion in Energy Cooperative as possible barriers to the Board's reliance on a settlement are present in this case.

Robert G. Levy II, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Randall N. Finley, Esq., of Houston, Texas, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD D. TAPLITZ, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried in Houston, Texas, on April 14 and 28, 1981. The charge in Case 23–CA–7929 was filed on May 7, 1980, by John T. Dumesnil, an individual. The charges in Cases 23–CA–7938–1 and 23–CA–7938–2 were filed on May 12, 1980, by W. P. Schulze, an individual, and Jack Hart, an individual, respectively. The charge in Case 23–CA–7938–4 was filed on May 20, 1980, by Melvin R. Laughlin, an individual. On July 1, 1980, an order consolidating cases and a complaint issued. The complaint alleged that five individuals,[1] whose names were set forth as discriminatees in the unfair labor practice charges, were discriminated against in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act when Texaco, Inc. (the Company) terminated certain employee benefits under its Accident and Sick Benefit Plan (A&S benefits) at the outset of a lawful economic strike. On September 10, 1980, the Regional Director for Region 23 of the Board issued an amended complaint adding the names of five other employees, none of whom had been named in the charges, as discriminatees. At the opening of the hearing, the Company moved to dismiss that part of the complaint that named the five additional discriminatees. That motion was denied. Also at the outset of the hearing, counsel for the General Counsel moved to add approximately 120 names to the complaint. Although, as set forth in detail below, the controlling Board law provides that it is lawful for an employer to withhold A&S benefits from employees who affirmatively demonstrate support of a strike by picketing or otherwise showing public support, counsel for the General Counsel acknowledged that he was in no position to know whether all or any of the employees he intended to amend into the complaint had participated in the strike. For the reasons set forth on the record (Tr. 41–44 and fn. 2 below), I denied the General Counsel's motion to amend. The General Counsel sought special permission to appeal that ruling and by telegram dated April 22, 1981, the Board denied the General Counsel's request without prejudice to the General Counsel's right to renew his contention through the filing of an appropriate exception. In his brief, counsel for the General Counsel in effect moves that I reverse my ruling with regard to the proposed amendment. That motion is denied for the same reasons that the original motion was denied.

[1] A sixth individual, W. A. Bartlett, the Charging Party in Case 23–CA–7938–3 was also named in the complaint. His name and that charge are deleted from the amended complaint.

Issues

The primary issue is whether the Company violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discontinuing the accident and sick (A&S) benefits that John T. Dumesnil, Richard M. Holt, Arthur Henry Sr., Chester F. Portier, Percy A. Bland Jr., Charles O. Broussard, Miguel J. Herbert, William P. Schulze, Jack Hart, and Melvin R. Laughlin had been receiving when the Company's employees went out on strike. Subsidiary questions are raised whether some of those employees came off A&S status during the strike because they were well enough to return to work and whether some of the employees disqualified themselves from A&S benefits by affirmatively demonstrating support of the strike by picketing or otherwise showing public support.

All parties were given full opportunity to participate, to introduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to file briefs. Briefs, which have been carefully considered, were filed on behalf of the General Counsel and the Company.

On the entire record[2] of the case and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

Findings of Fact

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE COMPANY

The Company, a Delaware corporation with plants and facilities located in Port Arthur and Houston, Texas, is engaged in the production, refining, and distribution of petroleum products throughout many States of the United States. During the 12 months immediately preceding the issuance of the complaint, the Company sold and shipped petroleum products valued in excess of $50,000 directly from its Port Arthur and Houston, Texas locations to places located outside of Texas. During the same period, the Company purchased goods valued in excess of $50,000, which had been shipped from points outside of Texas directly to its Port Arthur and Houston facilities. The Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO (OCAW), and its Locals 4–23 and 4–367 are, and each is, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Sequence of Events

Two of the Company's facilities are involved in this proceeding. One is in Port Arthur and the other is in Houston, Texas.

The Port Arthur facility is Texaco's largest refinery in the United States. It covers about 5000 acres and employs about 6000 people, of whom about 4000 are hourly rated employees. OCAW Local 4–23 has been those employees' collective-bargaining representative since 1942. The strike that gave rise to the issues in this case began on January 8, 1980, and ended at 2:30 p.m. on April 28, 1980. The Port Arthur facility had a long history of strikes. Between January 4, 1969, and the present time there were 10 strikes, all but 2 of which were authorized by Local 4–23. All the authorized strikes were honored by 100 percent of the bargaining unit employees and none of them crossed the picket line. Throughout those strikes, the facility continued to operate through the use of nonbargaining unit personnel. Even during the two nonauthorized wildcat strikes, only a handful of employees crossed the picket line. In 1 of them about 5 employees came to work and the other about 10.

The Houston facility employs about 279 employees. Those employees actually worked out of 25 or 30 different small field offices. OCAW Local 4–367 has been the collective-bargaining representative of those employees since 1944. The strike at that facility began on January 30, 1980, and ended on February 14, 1980. That was the first strike that had ever occurred at the Houston facility. About 202 of the approximately 279 employees at the Houston facility honored the strike and about 77 employees went to work. During the course of the strike, some of the employees went back to work until about 55 percent of the original employee complement remained on strike. Operations continued during the strike with the use of supervisors, exempt personnel, and the hourly employees who did not observe the strike.

At the conclusion of the strike, the Company entered into strike settlement agreements with both Local 4–23 at Port Arthur and Local 4–367 at Houston. The Port Arthur agreement provided for the payment of various sums of money to the employees who did not receive company contributions to health plans. The agreement specifically stated that the money was to be paid "in consideration of the Union's agreement to withdraw all contractual grievances and NLRB charges and court proceedings arising out of the Company's administration of employee benefit plans during the strike, and the Union's agreement not to institute any further actions arising out of said circumstances." The Company entered into a similar strike settlement agreement with Local 4–367 at the Houston facility. The parties stipulated that $150 was given to all employees at the Port Arthur facility as part of the overall settlement. The Unions are named in the complaint as parties to the contract, but they are not charging parties. The charges were filed by four individual employees.

[2] Certain errors in the transcript are noted and corrected.

The Company had collective-bargaining agreements with OCAW and Locals 4–23 and 4–367 that were effective by their terms from January 8, 1979, to January 7, 1981. About January 19, 1979, they entered into a memorandum of agreement, which provided for a reopener on certain issues. The memorandum also provided that if agreement was not reached on the matters subject to the reopener, the Unions would have the right to strike any time after January 8, 1980. No agreement was reached on such matters in negotiations prior to January 8. Local 4–23 went out on strike on January 8 and Local 4–367 went out on strike on January 30, 1980. The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that the strikes were in accordance with the terms and provisions of the memorandum of agreement. The strikes were, therefore, lawful economic strikes. The parties also stipulated, and I find, that the accident and sickness plans that are described below were in effect during the time of the strike at Port Arthur.[3]

The 1979 to 1981 contract covering the Port Arthur facility employees provided that existing employee benefit plans including the "accident and sick benefit plan" were incorporated in the agreement and that the Company agreed that it would not voluntarily "discontinue, change or modify such Plans during the term of this Agreement in such a way as to decrease the benefits under the said Plans to any employee covered by this Agreement." The 1979 to 1981 contract covering the Houston facility employees provides that existing employee benefit plans including "accident and sick benefit plan" are made a part of the contract. The Company's A&S plan covers both facilities. It sets forth, among other things, a schedule of benefits for nonoccupational illness or injury that starts at 4 weeks' benefits equivalent to full pay and 2 weeks' benefits equivalent to half pay after 1 year of completed service and gradually increases to 13 weeks' benefits equivalent to full pay and 39 weeks' benefits equivalent to half pay after 10 or more years of completed service. The plan provides that in order to qualify for benefits an employee must, if required, present evidence that is satisfactory to the Company showing that the absence is due to illness or accident. It further provides that illness or accident occurring when an employee is not on duty will not serve to disqualify the employee from benefits except where the illness or accident occurs while the employee is on military leave, personnel business leave, layoff, or vacation.

At the time of the January 8, 1980 strike at Port Arthur, the following company employees had qualified for and were receiving A&S benefits: John T. Dumesnil, Richard M. Holt, Arthur Henry Sr., Chester F. Portier, Percy A. Bland Jr., Charles O. Broussard, and Miguel J. Herbert. At the time of the January 30, 1980 strike at Houston, the following company employees had qualified for and were receiving A&S benefits: William P. Schulze, Jack Hart, and Melvin R. Laughlin. All of those employees were on off-duty status under doctor's care when the strikes began. Prior to the beginning of each strike, the Company notified the Unions that A&S benefits would be discontinued for the duration of the strike.

A&S benefits were discontinued for the duration of the strike. That discontinuation was based on a longstanding policy of the Company to refrain from paying A&S benefits during a strike. The Company made no inquiry whether employees who had been on A&S immediately before the strike engaged in any picketing or other strike-related conduct during the strike. None of the named employees ever notified the Company that they were disavowing the strike and none of them protested to the Company during the strike about the cutoff of the A&S benefits. The Company's policy of not making A&S payments during a strike was instituted following a strike in 1967. Since that time no payments of A&S benefits have been made during a strike, with exceptions not applicable here.

The parties stipulated and I find that as to the 10 employees named above: each was a member of OCAW during his employment with the Company; each was a member of the Union in good standing throughout that time; each supported the Union generally throughout that time; each accepted the monetary compensation that was part of the strike settlement agreement between OCAW and the Company in 1980; no release was obtained in connection therewith; and the constitution and bylaws of OCAW provide that members who hinder a lawfully called strike are subject to fines and/or expulsion.

Before discussing the individual situations of the alleged discriminatees, it is helpful to review the applicable law.

B. The Controlling Principles of Law

The controlling law applicable to this case is set forth in Emerson Electric Co., 246 NLRB 1143 (1979), enfd. as modified 650 F.2d 463 (3d Cir. 1981).[4] That case involves facts strikingly similar to the ones in issue here. In that case the employer had an A&S benefit plan in which benefits were based on length of employment. The employer made the decision to discontinue payment of benefits in the event of a strike before the strike action was taken. The employees engaged in a lawful economic strike that was 100percent effective. No employees went to work. Upon the commencement of the strike, the em-

[3] The strike at Houston began later and ended earlier than the Port Arthur strike, and this finding therefore also covers that strike.

[4] See also Walter Motor Truck Co., 256 NLRB 1059 (1981).

ployer discontinued A&S benefits to employees who had been receiving them at the time the strike began and no such payments were made for the duration of the strike. At the conclusion of the strike, the employer and the employees' collective-bargaining representative entered into an agreement under which they both undertook to withdraw all pending charges arising out of the strike, including proceedings brought by or against individuals. The Board held that the A&S benefits had accrued as a result of the past work performed and that the employer had violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discontinuing the A&S benefits. In substance, the Board held that the employer had imposed sanctions on some employees because other employees engaged in a lawful strike. The Board did not find significant the fact that the strike was 100-percent effective or that the union agreed to the withdrawal of all charges.[5] It also did not consider significant the fact that none of the employees on A&S notified the company that they disavowed the strike.[6] However, the Board went on to hold that an employee on A&S could lose his benefits if he enmeshed himself in the ongoing strike by picketing or otherwise showing public support for the strike. As the Board stated in Emerson, supra, 1143–1144:

> However, while disabled employees need not affirmatively disavow the strike action, neither can they participate in the strike without running the risk of forfeiting benefits prospectively. In this regard, the Administrative Law Judge has incorrectly concluded that Respondent may not rely on evidence that some of its employees who had been receiving disability benefits prior to the strike were later seen participating in the strike by their appearance on the picket line. Although a showing of participation in the strike does not justify post hoc Respondent's initial termination of benefits to these employees, we nevertheless do not consider participation in the strike to be protected expressions of opinion, as found by the Administrative Law Judge. For all practical purposes, any employee, disabled or sound, who affirmatively demonstrates his support of the strike by picketing or otherwise showing public support for the strike, has enmeshed himself in the ongoing strike activity to such an extent as to terminate his right to continued disability benefits. This result represents a fair accommodation between the rights of employees and the interests of employers. For, while employees have the protected right to receive disability benefits without disavowing the strike, an employer should not be obligated to finance a strike against itself, as would be the case if we ordered Respondent to pay such benefits for the period during which the disabled individuals participated in strike activity.
>
> Accordingly, we now hold that for an employer to be justified in terminating any disability benefits to employees who are unable to work at the start of a strike it must show that it has acquired information which indicates that the employee whose benefits are to be terminated has affirmatively acted to show public support for the strike. Barring such affirmative action, of course, we agree with the Administrative Law Judge that the disabled employees found herein to have been discriminated against are entitled to S and A benefits for the full length of their sickness or disability. [Footnotes omitted.]

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the Board's finding that the discontinuation of A & S benefits violated the Act. The court's reasoning is particularly relevant with relation to certain arguments made in the instant case by the Company. The court held (650 F.2d 463, 468–469):

> The relevant precedents establish the posts between which this issue falls. On one side, as the employer argues, it is not required to finance a strike against itself by paying wages or other similar expenses General Electric Co., 80 N.L.R.B. 510 (1948) (wages); Towne Chevrolet, 230 N.L.R.B. 479 (1977) (insurance policy premiums); Ace Tank and Heater Co., 167 N.L.R.B. 663 (1967) (medical insurance premiums). On the other side, an employer may not withhold payment of already earned or accrued benefits contingent upon the cessation by employees of a legitimate economic strike. This situation has arisen most frequently in the context of accrued vacation benefits. See N.L.R.B. v. Great Dane Trailers, Inc. [388 U.S. 26 at 32 (1967)]; Allied Industrial Workers, Local 289 v. NLRB, 476 F.2d 868, 875–876, 878 (D.C. Cir. 1973); NLRB v. Jemco, Inc., 465 F.2d 1148 (6th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1109, 93 S. Ct. 911, 34 L.Ed. 2d 696 (1973); NLRB v. Frick Co., 397 F.2d 956 (3d Cir. 1968). Accord, Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., 236 N.L.R.B. 986 (1978) (employer unlawfully withheld accumulated leave pay until employee ceased strike), enforced without opinion, 610 F.2d 812 (4th Cir. 1979).

[5] Regarding the strike settlement agreement in which the employer and the union agreed to withdraw all charges, the Board affirmed the ruling of the administrative law judge that the Board enforces public and not private rights and that the Board's power to prevent unfair labor practices cannot be divested by a private contractual agreement of the parties. While the Board certainly is not precluded from jurisdiction by a private agreement, a serious argument can be made that the Board should, as a discretionary matter, decline to assert its jurisdiction where a strike settlement agreement resolves all issues between the parties and the union has fairly represented the employees in the bargaining unit. A union can, in some circumstances, trade away statutorily granted rights in return for other benefits. Even the fundamental right to strike can be given up by execution of a contract containing a no-strike clause. Where after a bitter strike a company, on behalf of itself, and a union, on behalf of the employees it has a statutory duty to represent, resolve all their differences and agree to a stable contractual relation, their further agreement that all litigation be discontinued does go a long way toward fostering the goal of industrial harmony. However, the Board and the Third Circuit Court of Appeals have not viewed the problem in those terms.

[6] To that extent, the Board overruled one of its earlier cases, holding: Consequently, an employer may no longer require its disabled employees to disavow strike action during their sick leave in order to receive disability benefits. To allow the termination of such benefits to certain employees as a result solely of the strike activities of others is to penalize the employees who have not yet acted in support of the strike. To the extent that Southwestern Electric Power Company [216 NLRB 522], is inconsistent with our decision herein, it is hereby overruled. [Fn. omitted.]

In determining whether the S and A benefits in question fall most closely to one side or the other, the Board adopted the findings and conclusions of the ALJ that:

> the benefits being paid the sick people were not compensation for contemporaneous delivery of services at all, but rather payment for past work performed. Their entitlement to that money depended not one wit upon their working at that time. That it was deferred payment for work—albeit conditional upon their being sick and disabled—is true, but for work performed by them in the past, not in the present. Indeed, this is why the man who worked 30 years received more weeks of S and A benefits while sick than the man who had only performed as an employee a year, or two, or three. If the sick man must come out of the hospital and work during a strike to receive a benefit he sweated for in prior years, must the retiree, who is collecting the pension he earned over 35 years, also come back, merely because the working complement is striking at the moment? To ask the question is to answer it.

Accrued benefits, in contrast to wages, are deferred compensation for work already done. They may take the forms of wages due for past work, vacation time, seniority rights and other conditions of employment linked to past service. E.g., NLRB v. Darling & Co., 420 F.2d 63 (7th Cir. 1970), enforcing 170 N.L.R.B. 1068 (1968) (severance pay); Swift Service Stores, Inc., 169 N.L.R.B. 359 (1968) (Christmas bonus). Such benefits may be defeasible; for example, vacation time may be forfeited if not taken within a calendar year. The test in deciding if benefits have accrued is whether they are due and payable on the date on which the employer denied them. Allied Industrial Workers, Local 289 v. NLRB, supra, 476 F.2d at 876.

The S and A benefits in this case have the distinguishing characteristic of accrued benefits. As the ALJ and the Board found, the right to and the total amount of benefits are tied to the duration of past services and the wages paid for them. Although they are conditional on the employee suffering and continuing to suffer a disabling illness or injury, they do not depend on any return to work or on any future services to the employer.

Wiegand contends that the continued payment of benefits is conditional also on no strike occurring because the applicable benefit plan defines disability as the condition of being unable to work "solely because of" illness or injury. It argues that here the employees would not have worked during the strike because they were union members and because the strike was fully effective. Since they were not absent from their jobs solely because of physical disability, it claims they are not entitled to benefits.

We agree with the Board that the employer's reading of the disability definition is not tenable. The plan defines disability in terms of the employee being prevented from engaging in his or her "regular and customary occupation" because of illness or injury. This definition turns on the physical capacity to carry on one's occupation. Nor can we accept the employer's suggestion that payment of S and A benefits is dependent upon the availability of work for that particular employee. It has pointed to no language limiting the right to benefits in such a way.

In short, nothing in the record of this case indicates that the benefit plan contemplated that employees who were incapable of performing their usual occupations for the employer would not be deemed disabled for the purposes of receiving benefits. Rather, if an employee is certified as disabled, the only relevant consideration within the period for which benefits are due is whether the employee has again become able to work. Therefore, we find substantial basis supporting the Board's conclusion that the S and A benefits were accrued benefits and not wages, and were due and payable within the period of the strike.

However, the court disagreed with the Board's holding to the extent that the Board had found that benefits could be withheld for periods after the employees actually participated in strike activity or showed public support of the strike. On that issue, the court modified the Board's Order to authorize payment of A&S benefits "for the maximum period of each disabled employees' eligibility or for such employees' period of disability as defined in the plan, whichever is shorter." The court reasoned as follows (640 F.2d 463, 473–474):

> The Board asserts that its remedy serves the well established policy of protecting an employer from financing a strike against itself. E.g., General Electric Co., 80 N.L.R.B. 510 (1948). However, the entire basis of the Board's decision was that the S and A payments were to be considered as accrued benefits. Since an employer may not deny a striking employee accrued benefits, such as vacation pay, because of his or her active participation in a strike, it follows that the employer may not deny the S and A benefits merely because of the disabled employee's approval of or participation in strike activity.
>
> . . . . .
>
> Furthermore, the Board's order in this case is inconsistent with its holding, still viable, that an employee who pickets during off-duty time cannot be regarded as a "striker" against whom an employer can act.

The logic behind the court of appeals' decision is persuasive. Employees who strike engage in a protected activity. The strike also involves a withholding by employees of present services and as their pay is remuneration for present services the employer has no duty to compensate them for the time when they are out on strike. In that sense an employer need not finance a strike against itself. However, the employees on A&S are unable to work through physical disability and therefore they are not voluntarily withholding services from an employer in support of a labor dispute as are the strikers. They are not strikers and the A&S benefits they receive are not geared to present services. Under the A&S plan, the benefits accrue as a result of past work performed. There is no nexus between present services and pay the way there is with strikers. Under Section 7 of the Act, employees have the right to engage in concerted activities and also have the right to refrain from engaging in such activities. Employees who are not strikers such as those here who received A&S benefits because of their physical incapacity to work, engage in protected concerted activity when they either assist or refrain from assisting in a strike. However, as their benefits are not keyed to current pay for current work, a serious argument can be made that their benefits cannot be terminated for engaging in such activity. Under current Board law an employer can discontinue A&S benefits to employees who actively support a strike, even though the effect of that discrimination would be to discourage union activity. The employer is not only permitted but is required to continue A&S benefits to employees who refrain from actively supporting the strike. That also would be a discrimination that would discourage union activity. The employees' right to actively support or to refrain from actively supporting a strike is equally protected. Yet, under current Board law, an employee who actively supports a strike loses his right to receive A&S benefits while an employee who chooses to refrain from such action continues his entitlement. Under the court of appeals' analysis of the law, such an incongruity could not occur. Disabled employees who chose to actively support a strike would be treated the same as those who chose to refrain from such action. However, when there is a conflict between the Board and a court of appeals, an administrative law judge is required to follow the Board law. Regency at the Rodeway Inn, 255 NLRB 961 (1981). As the Board held in Iowa Beef Packers, 144 NLRB 615, 616 (1963), enfd. in part 331 F.2d 176 (8th Cir. 1964):

> In numerous instances, in connection with his consideration of the allegations of the complaint that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(2) and (3) of the Act, the Trial Examiner [now administrative law judge] relied, not on applicable Board precedent, but instead on certain decisions of U.S. Courts of Appeals which expressed views contrary to those of the Board, and which the Board has not accepted. The Trial Examiner's reliance on such court decisions constitutes fundamental error. As the Board has stated and reiterated:[2]
>
> > It has been the Board's consistent policy for itself to determine whether to acquiesce in the contrary views of a circuit court of appeals or whether, with due deference to the court's opinion, to adhere to its previous holding until the Supreme Court of the United States has ruled otherwise. But it is not for a Trial Examiner to speculate as to what course the Board should follow where a circuit court has expressed disagreement with its views. On the contrary, it remains the Trial Examiner's duty to apply established Board precedent which the Board or the Supreme Court has not reversed. Only by such recognition of the legal authority of Board precedent, will a uniform and orderly administration of a national act, such as the National Labor Relations Act, be achieved.

---

[1] Insurance Agents' International Union, AFL–CIO (The Prudential Insurance Company of America), 119 NLRB 768, 773.

[2] E.g., Novak Logging Company, 119 NLRB 1573, 1575–1576. See also Local 1426, International Longshoremen's Association, AFL–CIO (Heide and Company, Inc.), 128 NLRB 198, 205–206; Reliance Fuel Oil Corp., 129 NLRB 1166, 1177; North Country Motors, Ltd., 133 NLRB 1479, 1485.

C. The Alleged Discriminatees

1. Background

As is set forth above all 10 of the alleged discriminatees named in the complaint were qualified for and were receiving A&S benefits at the time the strike occurred at the plant in which each was working. Upon the commencement of the strike and for the duration thereof, A&S benefits were discontinued. Under the controlling Board law set forth above, there are only two questions remaining to be considered. The first is whether any of the alleged discriminatees should have been removed from the A&S rolls during the course of the strike because their physical condition permitted them to return to work. The second question is whether any of them enmeshed themselves in ongoing strike activity by affirmatively demonstrating support of the strike by picketing or otherwise showing public support for the strike. At such time as an employee became ineligible for A&S benefits because of his physical condition or because of his active strike support, the Company would have no further obligation to pay A&S benefits. Until that time the Company would have such an obligation.

2. The individual situations at Port Arthur

a. John T. Dumesnil

Dumesnil is an employee at Port Arthur facility. At the time of the strike on January 8, 1980, he was on A&S because of a hernia-type operation that had been performed on January 3, 1980. On February 18, 1980, he was released by his doctor to return to work. He did not return to work because of the strike. The General Counsel concedes in his brief that Dumesnil's A&S benefits terminated on February 18 when he was released by his doctor. Between January 8 and February 17, Dumesnil did not attend any union meetings and did not engage in any picketing. About 20 days after the strike began, which would place it about January 28, Dumesnil went to the union hall to tell them about his physical condition and to visit with the other union members. That action did not enmesh him in the ongoing strike activity to such an extent as to terminate his right to continued disability benefits. About 20 days later (which would place it about February 17, 1980), Dumesnil was scheduled for strike duty a second time. On that occasion he drove to the picket line with another employee and delivered coffee to the pickets. There is no need to consider whether that conduct enmeshed Dumesnil in the union activity because his A&S benefit eligibility terminated on February 18, 1980. The February 17 date was only an approximation based on adding two 20-day periods together from the commencement of the strike and in any event, there was no indication of what time of day Dumesnil delivered coffee to the picketers. If he became disqualified from A&S benefit late on January 17, it probably would have become effective as of January 18.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefits payments to Dumesnil from January 8 to February 18, 1980.

b. Richard M. Holt

Holt is an employee at the Port Arthur facility. At the time of the strike on January 8, 1980. Holt was receiving A&S benefits because of an upper respiratory infection and mononucleosis. He was released by his doctor to return to work on February 29, 1980, but he did not return to work because from that time on he was on strike. Between January 8 and February 29, 1980, he did not attend any union meetings and did not serve on the picket line. There was no evidence he engaged in any strike-related activities during that time.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Holt from January 8 to February 29, 1980.

c. Arthur Henry Sr.

Henry did not testify and there is no evidence in the record concerning him except to establish that he was a Port Arthur employee who was on A&S at the time of the January 8, 1980 strike. As all A&S benefits were discontinued on January 8, 1980, his benefits also ended. There is no evidence that he engaged in any strike-related activity. I find that discontinuation of A&S benefits to Henry on January 8, 1980, was in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. The question of whether Henry could have been removed from A&S thereafter either because he was physically able to return to work or because he engaged in strike-related activity is still open. Counsel for the General Counsel, in his brief, states that the Company's counsel has represented that Henry was a person who converted to longterm disability and who the Company already made whole. Counsel for the General Counsel urges in his brief that those matters be left to the compliance stage of the proceeding. The Company, in its brief, urges as a general matter that if the finding is made that any employee is entitled to A&S benefits, the question of when such employee recovered from illness or otherwise acted in a manner disqualifying him from benefits should be left to the compliance stage of the proceeding. In view of those positions and the state of the record, I recommend that a determination as to the amount of money, if any, due to Henry be determined in a compliance proceeding.

d. Chester F. Portier

Portier underwent a double bypass heart operation on August 17, 1979. At that time his doctor told him he would be able to return to work in about 3 months. Portier's testimony was so confused and internally inconsistent that it is difficult to make clear findings of fact. The following description of events is synthesized from certain parts of Portier's testimony that appeared credible and from various company records.

Sometime prior to the January 8, 1980 strike, one of Portier's doctors told him that he could go back to work. He called the Company and spoke to company nurse Liz Dorray. When he told her what the doctor said the nurse said that she would get in touch with his doctor. An entry on the company nurse's record dated January 3, 1980, states "Doctor Elster's office says this man has been released to R.W. [return to work] 1/7/80." The nurse called Portier and told him that the doctor did not want him to pick up things over a certain weight. She said that she would get in touch with his supervisor and would call him back but he was not to work until his supervisor spoke to him. The Company's visiting nurse record shows that on January 8 the Company mailed out another medical certificate concerning Portier and that on January 12 it received the medical certificate back with a return-to-work date of February 1, 1980. A claim statement in the Company's file signed by a Dr. E. K. Massin states that he last saw Portier on January 10, 1980, that Portier's condition and prognosis were good, and that, in his opinion, Portier could resume work on February 1, 1980. No restrictions on work were indicated. Portier testified that he was released by Dr. Massin to return to work on February 1, 1980, but that he did not go to work because he thought the Company was supposed to call him whenever they were ready for him. I do not credit Portier in that regard. There was some question about his return to work before the strike began, but that had nothing to do with the February 1, 1980 date. Portier's doctor told both Portier and the Company that Portier could return to work on February 1, 1980, but Portier, for his own reasons, decided no to do so. I find that Portier was physically able to return to work on February 1 and that as of that date he was no longer entitled to receive A&S benefits. The day the strike was over, Portier went to his doctor and obtained a note saying that he could return to work on the following day. Though the note was on a form that had a blank to be filled in to show when the patient was under the doctor's care, that blank was not filled in.

Portier did not visit the picket line during the strike. He only visited the union hall on one occasion and he went there to have his name removed from the striker list.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Portier from January 8, when the strike began, to February 1, 1980, when Portier no longer qualified for A&S benefits because his physical condition was such to allow him to return to work.

e. Percy A. Bland Jr.

Bland is an employee at the Port Arthur facility. At the time of the strike on January 8, 1980, he was on A&S because of a stomach ulcer. He was not released to return to work by his doctor until May 9, 1980, which was after the strike ended on April 28, 1980. During the course of the strike, Bland did not engage in any picketing or visit the picket line. The only time he visited the union hall was to attend an arbitration proceeding about April 1. There is no evidence he engaged in any strike-related activity.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Bland from January 8 to April 28, 1980.

f. Charles O. Broussard

Broussard is an employee at the Port Arthur facility. At the time of the strike on January 8, 1980, he was on A&S because of a cataract operation he underwent on December 17, 1979. On April 27, 1980, the day before the strike ended, Broussard saw his doctor and was released to return to work the following day. He returned on April 28, which was the day the strike ended. It could be merely a coincidence that Broussard's physical condition was so improved that he could return to work on the same day that the strike ended. I am extremely suspicious of such coincidences. However, Broussard appeared to be a credible witness and I am unprepared to discredit him merely on the basis of suspicious circumstances.

During the strike Broussard did not take part in the picketing, visit the picket line or the union hall, and did not engage in any activity for the Union.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Broussard from January 8 to April 28, 1980.

g. Miguel J. Herbert

Herbert is employed at the Port Arthur facility. At the time of the strike on January 8, 1980, he was on A&S because of a ruptured appendix he had suffered on November 30, 1979. He was released by his doctor to return to work on April 21, 1980, but he did not report for work at that time because he wanted to honor the picket line. From the time the strike began until April 21, he did not visit the union hall or the picket line.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Herbert from January 8 to April 21, 1980.

3. The individual situations at Houston

a. William P. Schulze

Schulze is employed at the Houston facility. At the time of the Houston strike on January 30, 1980, Schulze was on A&S because of heart disease. He was released by his doctor to return to work on March 4, 1980, which was after the strike ended on February 14, 1980. Schulze had been a member of the workmen's committee that negotiated the 1980 contract, but he resigned before the strike began. During the strike he did not visit the picket line, take part in the picket line, or visit the union hall.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Schulze from January 30, which was the commencement of the strike, through February 14, which was the end of the strike.

b. Jack Hart

Hart was employed at the Houston facility. He did not testify at this proceeding. The evidence does establish that he was receiving A&S benefits at the time of the January 30 strike and that all such benefits were discontinued for the duration of the strike.

The Company's division superintendent of employee relations, Robert E. McVey, testified that Hart retired February 1. However, the record does not indicate whether that was February 1, 1980, or February 1, 1981. There is no evidence in the record regarding whether Hart's physical condition allowed him to come off A&S after the strike began on January 30 and no evidence relating to whether Hart engaged in any strike-related activity. In his brief, the General Counsel states that the Company maintains through its counsel that Hart retired in February but that no representations were made concerning what benefits, if any, were paid to him. As with Henry, as discussed above, I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discontinuing Hart's A&S benefits on January 30 but I leave to the compliance stage of this proceeding whether Hart is entitled to any monetary payment and, if so, the amount of such payment.

c. Melvin R. Laughlin

Laughlin is employed at the Houston facility. At the time of the strike at Houston on January 30, 1980, he was on A&S because of a lower back pain. He was released by his doctor to return to work on February 20, 1980, which was after the strike ended on February 14, 1980. During the strike he did not engage in any picketing or visit the picket line. He did not visit the union hall. There was no evidence to indicate that he had engaged in any strike-related activity. He had been on the Union's negotiating committee at one time, but he left that position befor the strike began.

I find that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by failing to make A&S benefit payments to Laughlin from January 30 through February 14, 1980.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES ON COMMERCE

The activities of the Company, as set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with the operation of the Company described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relation to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States, and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that the Company has engaged in unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that the Company unlawfully withheld payments under its accident and sick benefit plan to the employees named below, I recommend that the Company be ordered to make them whole for the loss of benefits by payment to each of them the sum of money equal to the amount he normally would have received under the accident and sick benefit plan between the dates set forth below. Interest is to be paid thereon and is to be computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[7]

Payments are to be made for the following periods:

John T. Dumesnil	January 8 to February 18, 1980
Richard M. Holt	January 8 to February 29, 1980
Arthur Henry Sr.	Amount due, if any, to be determined in a compliance proceeding
Chester F. Portier	January 8 to February 1, 1980
Percy A. Bland Jr.	January 8 to April 28, 1980
Charles O. Broussard	January 8 to April 28, 1980
Miguel J. Herbert	January 8 to April 21, 1980
William P. Schulze	January 30 through February 14, 1980
Jack Hart	Amount due, if any, to be determined in a compliance proceeding
Melvin R. Laughlin	January 30 through February 14, 1980

[7] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
2. OCAW and its Locals 4–23 and 4–367 are, and each is, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. The Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by withholding benefits under its accident and sick benefit plan from employees during a strike when such employees were eligible for coverage under that plan because of physical disability and such employees had not enmeshed themselves in ongoing strike activity by picketing or otherwise showing public support for the strike.
4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

Owens Illinois, Inc. and Louise M. Colarusso. Case 4–CA–16071

September 22, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 5, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Robert W. Leiner issued the attached decision. The General Counsel filed exceptions and a brief in support of the exceptions and in support of the decision, and the Respondent filed cross-exceptions and a brief in support of the cross-exceptions and in support of the decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

We agree, for the reasons set forth by the judge, that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by denying employee Louise Colarusso a pay raise scheduled to begin on April 1, 1986,[3] by suspending her on March 20, and by discharging her on April 8. We disagree, however, with the judge's recommendation that the Respondent not be ordered to reinstate Colarusso to her previous position with full backpay.

The judge based his recommendation on Colarusso's "examples of untruthfulness" in her testimony at the hearing. The specific examples enumerated by the judge were: (1) Colarusso's testimony that Maintenance Supervisor McHale told her on March 10 that the vents in the medical department had been cleaned and her subsequent accusation that Safety Director Guffrovich had had the vents cleaned; (2) Colarusso's "evasive" testimony concerning whether Industrial Relations Director Shank asked her on March 20 for a copy of the Kirby Health Center report; (3) Colarusso's testimony that Union Shop Steward Slavoski told her that employees were complaining of tiredness, burning eyes, or headaches due to air quality; (4) Colarusso's statement to Shank [4] on March 19 that she had torn up and thrown away the Kirby Health Center report when in fact she had other copies of it; and (5) Colarusso's testimony that she made entries in her diary regarding the significant events in this case at the time the events occurred.

The Board has stated that it will withhold its usual remedy of reinstatement and backpay from a discriminatee who makes false statements at a hearing when the discriminatee's conduct "amount[s] to a malicious abuse of the Board's processes under circumstances which require forfeiture of remedy to effectuate the purposes of the Act." Service Garage, 256 NLRB 931 (1981). We find, for the reasons explained below, that it would not effectuate the purposes of the Act to deny Colarusso a full remedy.

The judge did not find Colarusso to be a generally untrustworthy witness. Although he discredited those portions of her testimony listed above, he credited the major portion of her testimony and relied on this credited testimony in finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) as alleged in the complaint by the General Counsel and in the charge by Colarusso.

In light of the fact that Colarusso was a generally trustworthy witness, we find the judge's recommended remedy unnecessarily harsh. In fashioning an appropriate remedy, we must be mindful that "[t]he Board . . . does not exist for the 'adjudication of private rights'; it 'acts in a public capacity to give effect to the declared public policy of the Act to eliminate and prevent obstructions to interstate commerce by encouraging collective bargaining.'" Phelps Dodge Corp. v. NLRB, 313 U.S. 177, 193 (1941), quoting National Licorice Co. v. NLRB, 309 U.S. 350, 362 (1940). The judge's recommended remedy disregards this principle. In fact, his denial of the normal remedy leaves the effects of the Respondent's unlawful conduct unremedied and thus fails to effectuate the policies of the Act. See Multi-Hydromatic Welding Co., 113 NLRB 755, 757 (1955).

Other factors also support the ordering of reinstatement and backpay in this case. The Respondent has completely failed to meet its burden of establishing that Colarusso is unfit for further employment with the Respondent.[5] The Respondent

[1] The General Counsel and the Respondent have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] Member Johansen, who did not participate in Meyers Industries, 281 NLRB 882 (1986), affd. sub nom. Prill v. NLRB, 835 F.2d 1481 (1987), agrees with the judge's conclusion that employee Colarusso was engaged in protected, concerted activity.

[3] All dates are in 1986 unless otherwise noted.

[4] The judge mistakenly recited that this statement was made to Guffrovich rather than to Shank.

[5] The Board has described a respondent's burden in such cases as follows:

> When seeking to be excused from his obligation to reinstate or to pay backpay to a discriminatee because of misconduct which was not a factor in the discriminatory action, an employer has a heavier never contended to the judge, either at the hearing or in its posthearing brief, that if the judge found the violations as alleged, Colarusso should be denied reinstatement and backpay because of her false statements in her testimony. Nor did the Respondent introduce any evidence to establish that Colarusso's false testimony would have any impact on her performance if reinstated.

Continued

The judge's speculation, based on no record evidence, that reinstatement would negatively impact on Colarusso's performance because she "occupies a delicate position in the health field where employer and employee confidence are concerned" neither meets the Respondent's burden nor nullifies the need for the Respondent to meet this burden. Further, the soundness of the speculation is suspect, given the fact that the Respondent's officials who testified were also discredited by the judge, at least in part, and there is no indication in the record that the Respondent took any action whatsoever against these officials. Cf. Service Garage, supra (reinstatement not ordered when the respondent affirmatively established that it would not have hired the discriminatee if it had been aware that the discriminatee falsified his employment application). Also, we note that it is undisputed that during her employment Colarusso had been rated as a "highly effective" employee.[6]

For all these reasons, we find, contrary to the judge, that it will not effectuate the purposes of the Act to require forfeiture of the traditional remedy of reinstatement with full backpay.[7] Although we do not condone Colarusso's false testimony at the hearing, we do not find that conduct, under the circumstances present in this case, justifies the penalties imposed on Colarusso by the judge. See generally American Navigation Co., 268 NLRB 426 (1983).[8] Accordingly, we will modify the judge's recommended Order to provide reinstatement and full backpay for Colarusso.

AMENDED REMEDY

We will order the Respondent to offer discriminatee Louise M. Colarusso immediate and full reinstatement to her former position or, if that position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and to make her whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination practiced against her with backpay to be computed in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest as computed in New Horizons for the Retarded.[9]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Owens Illinois, Inc., Pittston, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a).

"(a) Offer Louise M. Colarusso immediate and full reinstatement to her former position or, if that position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make her whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination practiced against her with backpay to be computed in the manner set forth in the amended remedy section of this decision."

---

burden than when he is merely seeking to justify the original discrimination. In the former case, he has the burden of proving misconduct so flagrant as to render the employee unfit for further service, or a threat to "efficiency in the plant." [Mandarin, 228 NLRB 930, 931–932 (1977), quoting O'Daniel Oldsmobile, 179 NLRB 398, 405 (1969).]

[6] The circuit court cases relied on by the judge to deny reinstatement and backpay to Colarusso are distinguishable. In NLRB v. Magnusen, 523 F.2d 643 (9th Cir. 1975), the court denied reinstatement to a discriminatee who admitted after the hearing that he had given false testimony and that he had in fact claimed and been paid for work that he had not performed. The court emphasized that the discriminatee had "stole[n] from his employer and . . . severely impeded the vital fact-finding process by repeated[ly] lying . . . ." (Id. at 646.) In the instant case, however, Colarusso has engaged in no egregious conduct against the Respondent. Nor, in light of her general credibility, has she "severely impeded" the factfinding process. Similarly, unlike here, the discirminatee in NLRB v. Jacob E. Decker & Sons, 636 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1981), was convicted of a felony after his discharge, and the respondent in NLRB v. Western Clinical Laboratory, 571 F.2d 457 (9th Cir. 1978), introduced evidence that the discriminatee was incompetent to perform his laboratory duties and might thereby endanger the health and safety of patients. Finally, the court in Iowa Beef Packers v. NLRB, 331 F.2d 176 (8th Cir. 1964), denied reinstatement to a discriminatee whose testimony the judge discredited in toto and who the judge found lied on the face of the charge that was filed. In the instant case, however, Colarusso was generally credible and the charge allegations were found to be supported by her testimony.

[7] Even if we were to agree with the judge that reinstatement was not warranted, the judge incorrectly cut off the backpay period on the date of Colarusso's discharge. See East Island Swiss Products, 220 NLRB 175 (1975).

[8] In American Navigation, the Board distinguished the situation in which a discriminatee in compliance proceedings concealed interim earnings for certain quarters from that in which the concealment cut across all backpay quarters. In the former situation, the Board found that a remedy that denied backpay only for the quarters in which concealed employment occurred would effectuate the purposes of the Act, whereas in the latter situation the discriminatee would be denied all backpay. In fashioning these different remedies, the Board was guided, as we are here, by considerations of the public interest in both assuring the intergrity of its proceedings and seeing that unfair labor practices are remedied.

[9] 283 NLRB 1173 (1987). Interest on and after January 1, 1987, shall be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621. Interest on amounts accrued prior to January 1, 1987 (the effective date of the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621), shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

2. Insert the following as paragraph 2(b) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

"(b) Remove from its files any reference to the unlawful discharge and notify her in writing that this has been done and that the discharge will not be used against her in any way."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT deprive any employee of a pay raise, or suspend or discharge employees because they engage in concerted activities protected under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Louise M. Colarusso immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make her whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from her discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL notify her that we have removed from our files any reference to her discharge and that the discharge will not be used against her in any way.

OWENS ILLINOIS, INC.

Joel H. Levinson, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Richard M. Goldberg, Esq. (Hourigan, Kluger, Spohrer & Quinn), of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ROBERT W. LEINER, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard on and between 28–30 September 1987 in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, on the General Counsel's complaint[1] alleging, in substance, that Owens Illinois, Inc. (the Company or Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, by (a) on or about 18 March 1986 denying its employee, Louise M. Colarusso, a wage increase, and (b) on or about 20 March 1986 suspending, and on or about 8 April 1986, terminating her employment, all because she engaged in concerted activities for the mutual aid or protection of employees while collecting certain dust samples and submitting the samples for independent analysis. In the alternative, the General Counsel alleges violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act because Respondent engaged in the above conduct because it believed that Colarusso had spoken with employees concerning the results of the independent laboratory analysis of the dust samples. Respondent's timely answer admits certain allegations of the complaint, denies others, and denies the commission of any unfair labor practices. In particular, Respondent alleges that the Charging Party was not engaged in protected concerted activities and alleges that she was discharged and otherwise disciplined because of insubordination.

At the hearing, all parties were represented by counsel, were given full opportunity to call and examine witnesses, to submit oral and written evidence, and to argue orally on the record. At the close of the hearing, the parties waived the right to present final argument and elected to submit briefs. Thereafter, the General Counsel and Respondent filed timely posthearing briefs that have been carefully considered.

On the entire record, including the briefs, and from my particular observation of the demeanor of the witnesses as they testified, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION: RESPONDENT AS STATUTORY EMPLOYER

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that at all material times, Respondent, an Ohio corporation, manufactures at its production facility in Pittston, Pennsylvania, television face panels, and during the year prior to May 1987, in the course and conduct of its business operations, sold and shipped products from its Pittston plant valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Respondent admits and I find that at all material times it has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE UNION AS A STATUTORY LABOR ORGANIZATION

The complaint alleges, the Respondent admits, and I find that at all material times Glass, Pottery, Plastics and Allied Workers International Union, Local 243 (the Union) at all material times is and has been a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.[2]

[1] The underlying unfair labor practice charge was filed by Louise M. Colarusso on 8 September 1987 and served on Respondent on or about 9 September 1986. The complaint is dated 1 May 1987.

[2] Louise Colarusso is not a member of the production and maintenance bargaining unit of which the Union is the collective-bargaining representative. Colarusso, a registered nurse, Respondent's head nurse, is a salaried rather than an hourly paid employee. There is no contention that she is a

Continued

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondent's Pittston plant, about 10 miles from Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, occupies about 800,000 square feet, employs about 850 employees in its production and maintenance unit together with approximately 150 administrative employees, and manufactures the glass face plates for color television tubes and cathode ray tubes. Among the chemical ingredients used in the manufacture of glass for these tubes are arsenic, antimony, and lead, exposure to each of which is highly toxic under certain conditions. These chemicals, and other ingredients, are mixed in the plant area called the batchhouse. Batchhouse employees and employees who work in the furnace area where the chemical and glass ingredients are introduced into furnaces, wear filter respirators in order to avoid inhaling these chemicals. The respirators are worn because of the danger that the air ventilation system in the plant production area will be insufficient to carry away the airborne corrosive dust materials which the employees handle. It is the inhalation of airborne toxic dust that Respondent seeks its employees specifically avoid. The employees are further protected from undue exposure by restrictive regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1593) (OSHA) and particularly 29 CFR § 1910.1018 relating to the protection of employees from exposure to inorganic arsenic.

Monitoring of the air with special air pumps and filters is performed on a regular basis by Respondent in the areas where the employees wear respirators, the batchhouse and the furnace area. Monitoring was not performed in administrative areas. Although the plant, through its own safety department, tests and monitors the corrosive possibilities of airborne dust perhaps several hundred times per year (Tr. 467–468), Respondent, on a corporate divisional basis, also monitors air in the plant. Thus Respondent's divisional industrial hygiene department, covering 4 plants and 3000 employees, employs a divisional industrial hygienist (Terrance L. Richardson) who, on a quarterly basis, monitors the air quality at the Pittston plant where the employees wear respirators. In particular, he does dust monitoring for airborne dust levels of lead, antimony, arsenic, silicon, and welding fumes. He also monitors noise and chemical solvent exposure along with routine physical examinations of employees in the batch and furnace department, including urine analysis and blood testing.

Respondent's particular interest and concern is airborne dust rather than the appearance of corrosive chemicals in dust itself. Notwithstanding that dust itself is of lesser consequence and interest, the place where the dust is found, particularly if the dust might be carried in the ventilation system, is significant. The plant administrative area and offices enjoy a forced-air, vented, ventilation system. The production area does not have such a system.

As above noted, 29 CRF § 1910, the Code of Federal Regulations, particularizing the OSHA statute, contains about 1000 subparts governing and regulating chemical toxic substances in industrial settings. In particular, subpart 1018 is the standard relating to inorganic arsenic. The "Permissible Exposure Limit" under subpart 1018, is 10 micrograms of inorganic airborne arsenic per cubic meter in an 8-hour period. The regulation also establishes an "Action Level." If monitoring shows that the airborne arsenic level is below 5 micrograms per cubic meter in the 8-hour period, then there is no need to continually monitor the area by the air filter method. As a general proposition, however, the OSHA regulation requires employer action if there is a change in levels of airborne arsenic suggesting that additional exposure is present.

As will be seen, the evidence demonstrates Respondent's serious concern with the possibility of detrimental effects among its employees because of the toxicity of airborne arsenic. Consistent with this interest, Respondent maintains a laboratory in Toledo, Ohio, where it analyzes samples of toxic materials sent to it from its various plants. The analytical techniques used in the Toledo laboratory may not be and, on this record, sometimes were not, as delicate as those techniques in other laboratories (Tr. 360–362).

B. Colarusso's Submission of Dust Samples to Kirby Health Center

Respondent's machine shop employees were moved from their upstairs location to the basement around April 1985. Joseph Slavoski, a machine shop employee of 19 years and, in the summer of 1985, a union-shop steward and member of the union business committee, held meetings with Respondent's plant manager (Townsend) and industrial relations director (John "Jack" Shank) about once a month concerning grievances and other plant problems. As plant nurse, Colarusso was often present. By the summer of 1985, more than half of the dozen employees in the machine shop were complaining of tiredness, dizziness, and sore throats. As a result, Slavoski took these complaints to the joint union-management (business committee) meetings and complained of employee health problems on several occasions in the early fall of 1985. In response, the plant manager and the industrial relations director said they would investigate the problems. In one conversation in the fall of 1985, Slavoski asked Industrial Relations Director Shank to have someone come down to the machine shop and answer employee complaints concerning the air environment in the basement machine shop. Shank, however, said that it was mostly a problem of the employees' change of scenery, going from upstairs to downstairs. There is however, no dispute that in the summer and fall of 1985, Respondent was engaged in a construction program at the Pittston plant that resulted in high levels of dust in the ventilation system that serves the administrative offices of the plant. Slavoski twice specifically denied mentioning employee complaints over air quality or physical symptoms to Louise Colarusso, or to Deborah (Debbie) Savoia, Colarusso's lunchtime companion. (Tr. 32; 38– supervisor and Respondent does not argue that by professional status or otherwise she is not an "employee" protected by the Act.

---

40.) Colarusso contradicted Slavoski and testified that she did have a conversation with him concerning the machine shop employees' complaints and symptoms of tiredness, burning eyes, and headaches (Tr. 50). In view of this contradiction, I do not credit Colarusso's testimony of such a conversation with Slavoski.[3]

In the summer of 1985, Savoia, secretary to Shank in the personnel department, regularly complained to head nurse Louise Colarusso, an employee of Respondent for 19 years. She complained of burning of the eyes, sore throat, coughing, and tiredness, symptoms and complaints that Colarusso herself testified she had experienced in the same period. In addition, Colarusso testified that commencing in the fall of 1985 and into the spring of 1986, she had several times fallen, had experienced nausea and diarrhea, also suffering from neuritis and pains of the feet. No independent medical evidence supports this testimony. I nevertheless credit such testimony.

By November 1985, Deborah Savoia had consulted a physician (Dr. Casterline) and submitted a urine sample because of these symptoms. At the beginning of December 1985, Savoia received the laboratory report on her urine sample. It showed abnormally high readings of both arsenic and iron.[4] Having received the urinalysis report around December 5, Savoia gave the report to Colarusso. Colarusso told Savoia to discuss the report with Dr. Joseph Campanella, Respondent's plant physician. Colarusso read the Savoia medical reports and gave them to Dr. Campanella. Sometime immediately thereafter, Savoia saw Dr. Campanella about the report and, although the matter was never discussed in Colarusso's presence, Dr. Campanella did discuss the matter with Respondent's plant director of health and safety, Colarusso's supervisor, Margaret (Peggy) Guffrovich (Tr. 135–136).

In January 1986, Savoia, who worked down the hall from Colarusso in the medical department, gave Colarusso a Pennsylvania Department of Health article on arsenic (G.C. Exh. 3). Knowing of Savoia's urine sample showing an abnormal arsenic level, and having read this literature, Colarusso, sometime in early January 1986, spoke to Safety Director Peggy Guffrovich about dust in the administrative area and asked Guffrovich to take samples. Guffrovich sent over Plant Chemist Del Cragle. In January, Del Cragle did perform dust tests in the medical department and, thereafter, Guffrovich showed Colarusso the test results. The results showed that the levels of arsenic and lead, according to Respondent's Toledo, Ohio laboratory, were of a nondetectable level. Guffrovich said that dust accumulations came from construction in the plant and the results showed various trace quantities of elements but no arsenic (Tr. 231; 450–452). She also credibly testified that after she had given permission for Cragle to do the January dust sampling, another laboratory technician told her that Colarusso wanted to do further dust sampling and he asked Guffrovich for permission. Guffrovich gave the laboratory technician permission to perform the further test that was apparently not performed (Tr. 452–453, 464).

In early February, Colarusso testified that a machinist (Richard Zabrovian) told Colarusso of many employees in the machine shop who were sick.[5] Thereafter, in February 1986, Colarusso told Safety Director Guffrovich that employees in the machine shop were complaining about the air and dust.

Particularly as a result of her own and Savoia's symptoms, and having read the arsenic literature given to her by Savoia, Colarusso on 12 February 1986, collected a sample of dust from an air exhaust vent in the medical department. Since Colarusso's automobile was in the repair shop, Colarusso asked Savoia to take this dust sample to the nearby Kirby Health Center for analysis, and Savoia agreed.

On 13 February, during the morning coffeebreak in the company cafeteria, Savoia mentioned to a coemployee that she was going to drop off the sample. Slavoski overheard the conversation and asked Savoia if she would be willing to take a dust sample which he would collect over to the Kirby Health Center for analysis. Savoia agreed. Later in the morning, Slavoski asked a coemployee in the machine shop to gather a dust sample from the machine shop area, place it in a plastic bag, and return it to him. Slavoski told the employee (Zabrovian) that he wanted to send the dust out as a sample (Tr. 22). Zabrovian then gave him the dust sample in the plastic bag and Slavoski turned it over to Savoia.[6]

Savoia then brought the two dust samples to the Kirby Health Center and presented them under her own name. She paid $30 to the hospital for the analysis of Slavoski's sample; and $30 for analysis of Colarusso's sample. This second $30 had been given to her by Colarusso for that purpose.

Savoia received a 27 February 1986 report on the two samples from the Kirby Health Center (G.C. Exh. 7) on 5 March 1986. On the same day, Savoia gave a copy of the report, bearing Savoia's name, to Colarusso. When Colarusso got the copy from Savoia, she deleted Savoia's name and address from the report and made copies of it.

C. The Kirby Health Center Report (G.C. Exh. 7)

The hospital report showed analysis of dust from two bags for both arsenic and antimony. The Colarusso dust sample from the medical area showed 22 micrograms of arsenic and 190 micrograms of antimony per gram of [3] Although this matter does not dispose of the question of whether, as noted, Colarusso was engaged, with other employees, in concerted protected activities, I find it important to note my discrediting of Colarusso in this testimony because of repeated lapses of credibility on her part. Although the General Counsel now suggests that Slovoski simply did not recall complaining to Colarusso (Br. 2–3), he originally argued that Slavoski's original denial was a result of confusion (Tr. 38–39). Slavoski nevertheless again denied discussing complaints with Colarusso (Tr. 40).

[4] The laboratory's normal value for arsenic was "below 25," whereas Savoia's urine showed a reading of 39 units of arsenic. (G.C. Exh. 8.)

[5] Zabrovian did not testify.

[6] In early December, Savoia took a second urine test and it showed that her arsenic and iron levels had decreased significantly and were within normal limits. She told Dr. Campenella of this 2 December urinalysis when she saw him on 2 January. She spoke of the result of the test to Colarusso on the next day, 3 January 1986. Savoia also testified that when she complained to the Company about the volume of the airflow in the administrative area on 6 December, it was adjusted and her symptoms decreased. At a later date she had been told (Tr. 236) that the air system had been working at an increased capacity during the period of new construction.

dust. The Slavoski sample showed 105 micrograms of arsenic and 570 micrograms of antimony per gram of dust.

Although Colarusso was able to read and understand the weights assigned to the arsenic and antimony findings, she did not know their significance in terms of possible health effects.

On the next day, 6 March 1986, Colarusso encountered her old friend, Jorge Garcia-Pons, the industrial engineering supervisor (a peer of Industrial Relations Director Shank in the hierarchy) in the Pittston plant. As a matter of coincidence, Garcia-Pons had been assigned the new duties of plant purchasing agent and a secretary was to be assigned to the purchasing department to assist him. The secretary to be transferred was Debbie Savoia who was to leave her job as secretary to the industrial relations director and become Garcia-Pons' clerical assistant. Garcia-Pons knew of the regular lunchtime relationship between Savoia and Colarusso and wanted information as to what type of clerical was being assigned to him. Colarusso told him that Savoia was sick with arsenic toxicity and that Colarusso, herself, had been sick with similar symptoms. She also told him that she had collected a dust sample from the medical department, had submitted it to the Kirby Health Center, and that the report showed arsenic in the dust. Colarusso also told him, however, that she did not know what the reported "numbers" meant and wanted to show Garcia-Pons the report to discover its health significance. She also told him that the report showed arsenic in the dust in the machine shop as well as in the medical administrative office. Colarusso invited him to her office and told him that she would show him the report, which she did. Garcia-Pons looked over the report (Tr. 80; 396).

Garcia-Pons recalls seeing the Kirby Health Center letterhead and told Colarusso that he could not interpret the values listed in the report. The testimony of Colarusso and Garcia-Pons then becomes contradictory. According to Colarusso, Garcia-Pons read the report and said: "Jesus Christ. I told [Machine Shop Supervisor Gerald] Dean to make sure that there's no arsenic there." On the other hand, Garcia-Pons testified that he told her that not only could he not interpret the values, but that because of Respondent's continued air and blood testing, the values were "meaningless"; that Colarusso was "entering into a witch hunt"; that her investigation was a waste of time; and that she should forget about the whole thing. However, he testified that he added that, if she insisted on interpreting the Kirby Health Center's figures, she should see Plant Health Engineer Joseph Nardone or Plant Physician Dr. Joseph Campenella. At this point, according to Colarusso, she told Garcia-Pons that she wanted the information held in the strictest confidence until she received an interpretation of the "numbers." Garcia-Pons told her that his "lips are sealed" (Tr. 83).

Contrary to Garcia-Pons' assertion that he told her to speak to Supervisor Nardone or Dr. Campenella, Colarusso testified that Garcia-Pons then told her to call OSHA for an interpretation of the arsenic values. Colarusso says that she asked him for advice about what she should ask OSHA concerning the figures; that Garcia-Pons told her to ask OSHA what were the permissible air levels; and that if OSHA reported that it was insignificant, she should just forget about it (Tr. 83).

Colarusso then telephoned OSHA, described the dimensions of the area in which she obtained the sample, and read the Kirby Health Center report directly to the OSHA official She mentioned only the arsenic level of 220 micrograms per gram and did not mention the antimony (Tr. 86). The OSHA official told her that the acceptable or permissible air level of arsenic was 10 micrograms per cubic meter in the air and that her dust sample of 220 micrograms per gram was a negligible amount of arsenic (Tr. 86–87).

I credit Colarusso's version and discredit Garcia-Pons. I find that he told her to contact OSHA and did not tell her to speak only with Plant Supervisor Nardone and Dr. Campenella. I also do not credit his denial of telling Colarusso that he had told Mechanical Area Supervisor Dean[7] to be careful of arsenic in the machine department. Furthermore, I also credit Colarusso, over Garcia-Pons' denial, that she telephoned him on the same day, 6 March, to tell him of the result of her OSHA conversation, in substance, that OSHA said the arsenic level was negligible.[8] I make these credibility resolutions both on the basis of my observation of the demeanor of Garcia-Pons and Colarusso and on the reasonableness of the testimony. There is no explanation on the record why Colarusso would have called OSHA but for Garcia-Pons' suggestion, the suggestion of an old friend and a trained engineer. Indeed, if Garcia-Pons had suggested that she contact only Nardone and Campenella, it would appear to me that Colarusso would have done so. It was, however, on Garcia-Pons' suggestion that she called OSHA. She did so. In retrospect, in view of the consequences (described below) that flowed from his apparently unthinking suggestion that she call OSHA, I can readily see why Garcia-Pons would deny his making that suggestion to Colarusso notwithstanding their long friendship. The evidence of record concerning Respondent's attitude relating to any of its employees taking dust samples to an outside agency for testing, much less actually contacting OSHA concerning these samples, demonstrates the reason for Garcia-Pons' untruthful testimony. I do not credit his denials. In reaching this conclusion, I have considered and rejected the counterargument: that Supervisor Garcia-Pons, an employee of 29 years (Tr. 383), aware of Respondent's rigid chain of hierarchical command and its distaste for OSHA, would not make such a suggestion.[9] [7] Dean did not testify.

---

[8] On the same day that she spoke to Garcia-Pons and had also spoken to OSHA, Colarusso fell again and collected another dust sample, which she brought to the Kirby Health Center for testing on 14 March. The second Kirby Health Center report is dated 21 March (G.C. Exh. 5) and plays no role in this case.

[9] Though this credibility resolution appears to me to be fully supportable, I nevertheless have made it in the face of other vital credibility resolutions that directly and consistently undermine Colarusso's veracity. In this case, I was guided by Judge Hand's famous dictum that: "nothing is more common in all kinds of judicial decisions than to believe some and not all [of a witness'] testimony." NLRB v. Universal Camera Corp., 179 F.2d 749, 754 (2d Cir. 1950), vacated and remanded on other grounds 340 U.S. 474 (1951).

D. The Events of 13 March 1986

The events of 13 March 1986 are in dispute regarding Colarusso's conversations in the maintenance department office. I nevertheless find that on the morning of 13 March, in the maintenance department office, she spoke with Assistant Plant Engineer Bill McHale and asked him if he knew anything about the plant being fined by OSHA for dust in the ventilation system. When McHale answered that he knew nothing about it, Respondent's environmental foreman, George Potak, said that there had been no OSHA fine or citation but that there was a fine imposed by the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources (DER) and that it was a result of a short shut down of Respondent's smokestack electrostatic precipitator. After Potak told her that the Respondent had been fined by DER rather than OSHA (Tr. 385), Colarusso said that Respondent, bypassing its filters, was pumping polutants into the air that were being sucked into the plant air intakes; and that employees were getting sick in the plant, complaining of red eyes and sore throats.

Colarusso, in substance, denies the above conversation: that she was accusing the Company of anything, but, rather, was asking questions of what was going on. I do not credit her version even if her assertions were in the form of questions. As I observed her, such questions, forcefully put, implied company inaction.

Furthermore, there is an alleged dispute concerning the reaction of a secretary in the office, Diane Gubiotti. Supervisor Potak testified that Gubiotti asked him, after Colarusso left the office, "do we have a problem?" and Potak answered that there was no problem that he was aware of. He then explained to Gubiotti the operation of the smokestack electrostatic precipitators. According to Colarusso, Gubiotti told her, as Colarusso was leaving, that Gubiotti's cousin had been exposed to chemicals and died of Hodgkins disease. I do not find any actual dispute here. I find that all the above occurred because there is no inconsistency.

Although I have found that Colarusso made the above accusations—whether in question form or not—I reject Respondent's argument that such accusations constituted one of the reasons for later discharging Colarusso, notwithstanding that it appears in its letter of termination (G.C. Exh. 6).[10] It is enough to find, as I do, that Colarusso stated that the plant's ventilation system, perhaps bypassing filters, did not filter out harmful chemicals.

E. Later events of 13 March 1986

Later in the day, Safety Director Peggy Guffrovich called Colarusso into her office in the presence of the plant environmental engineer, Joe Nardone. The events precipitating this meeting are as follows.

After Colarusso had earlier visited the plant maintenance office (speaking to Supervisors McHale and Potak concerning the DER citation and fine), Plant Supervising Engineer Ostrowski telephoned Guffrovich and told her that Colarusso had been in the maintenance office that morning asking questions about the DER citation and making statements that upset the secretary, Diane Gubiotti. Guffrovich reported this telephone call to Industrial Relations Director Shank who told her to get a copy of the DER citation and review it with Colarusso.

Guffrovich then called Environmental Engineer Nardone and asked him to bring a copy of the DER citation to her office. When he did so, she telephoned Colarusso and told her of the complaint from the plant engineer (Ostrowski): that Colarusso had not only upset Gubiotti but had made accusations inconsistent with the DER citation.

Colarusso entered Guffrovich's office and knew that Nardone was an environmental specialist. Guffrovich asked her why she was questioning Supervisor McHale about the DER fine. Colarusso told her she was only interested in the dust in the ventilation system and thought that if the fine had something to do with that situation, the employees would not get any more dust through the system. Guffrovich then asked Colarusso why she questioned McHale about the fine in view of Del Cragle's earlier testing that showed, as Colarusso knew, no arsenic or other toxins. Colarusso told her that she thought that there were chemicals present in the dust; that the employees should be concerned about it; and that she herself was showing symptoms of arsenic toxicity. Nardone said that he had similar complaints and had been to see Dr. Campanella. Colarusso said not only that she knew that he had been down to see Campanella but that she was going to see her family doctor to be tested for chemicals. She told Guffrovich that there were four new cases of cancer together with mental health and heart problems in the plant and that she did not believe that the Respondent's tests for harmful chemicals were conclusive.

After Guffrovich told Colarusso that she had upset Gubiotti by her statements concerning the inadequate ventilation system, Nardone and Guffrovich told Colarusso that the plant ventilation system contained two separate sets of filters for effluent from the furnaces that filtered the air coming into the office ventilation system. Guffrovich told her not to make statements in the form of accusations in front of people like Gubiotti who did not understand the ventilation system. When Colarusso replied that these matters should not be hidden from the employees, Guffrovich answered that she did not ask Colarusso to hide anything.

Colarusso then said that she did not believe that Respondent's tests were conclusive and told them that she had taken a dust sample from her office and sent it to the Kirby Health Center for testing; that she contacted OSHA; that the analysis, unlike the Del Cragle test, showed the presence of arsenic; but that the arsenic was not shown to be at a toxic level. Colarusso also stated that Respondent had never had continuing monitoring of the air in the medical department. Guffrovich testified that Colarusso's statement—that Colarusso had sent a sample of dust to the Kirby Health Center and had contacted OSHA "stunned" her (Tr. 284; 444). When Guf-[10] The next morning, 14 March, George Potak told Colarusso by phone that he and Guffrovich were doing tests on filters in the ventilation system. Colarusso asked him to let her know what the results were. Potak evidently made the phone call because of what Guffrovich learned later in the prior afternoon (13 March).

frovich asked why she had taken a sample without asking or telling Guffrovich or anybody else what she was doing, Colarusso answered that she submitted the sample because she was having symptoms, feeling sick and she just wanted to see what the testing results would be from an independent laboratory.

Nardone then asked Colarusso what the test results showed. Colarusso told him that it showed arsenic of 220 micrograms per gram of dust (Tr. 595) and that OSHA said this was negligible when she telephoned (Tr. 284). Nardone tried to describe the type of test that Kirby Hospital Center must have used and Colarusso said that she did not know what kind of test Kirby had used. Guffrovich then asked Colarusso for a copy of the test results and, when Colarusso said she did not have one at the plant, Guffrovich asked her to bring a copy in the next day. Colarusso agreed (Tr. 445).

Guffrovich and Nardone then reported the results of their conversation with Colarusso to Industrial Relations Director Shank (Tr. 284). In particular, they told him that Colarusso had taken a dust sample and submitted it to an outside laboratory, had contacted OSHA about it, and that Guffrovich asked for a copy of the results. Shank testified that between his 13 March receipt of this information from Guffrovich and Nardone and 17 March, he had at least two phone conversations with the divisional office in Toledo, in one of which a company lawyer was involved. Other participants in the conversations were Plant Manager "Skip" Townsend and the Respondent's divisional industrial relations director in Toledo, George Herron. He told all three of them of the results of the Colarusso conversation including her contacting OSHA (Tr. 285–287). One element of the conversations (Tr. 480) was the form of discipline to be administered to Colarusso. The possibilities discussed by these supervisors ranged from a written warning to discharge.[11] None of these decision-makers appeared as witnesses. Shank could not recall who raised the possibility of discharge in these conversations. By 17 March, according to Shank, as a result of the various conversations, the group decision was to limit discipline only to a rescission of Colarusso's approaching 6-percent pay raise that was to be effective on 1 April 1986. (Tr. 303–304.)

A first result of Shank speaking with Respondent's divisional industrial relations director, George Herron, was that Herron notified the divisional industrial hygienist, Terrence L. Richardson, to fly to the Pittston plant and do air sampling because the plant nurse had a dust sample analyzed that showed arsenic (Tr. 335–337). No other Herron instructions appear in the record. Richardson ultimately arrived on 18 March.

On the next day (14 March after the Colarusso-Nardone-Guffrovich conversation, Guffrovich told her that she had not. When Guffrovich asked her why she had not brought it in, Colarusso told her that she did not know if she was going to give a copy to Guffrovich and that she would have to "see" about it.

[11] It is essential to an understanding of the conclusions here that the discharge of Colarusso was raised as a disciplinary possibility resulting from her conduct on 13 March, alone.

F. Events of 18 March

About 8:30 a.m. on 18 March, Richardson and Guffrovich came to the medical office and told Colarusso that Richardson had come to do air sampling. Colarusso's assistant, nurse Michaelene Lyons, was also present at this time. Colarusso suggested that a dust sample be taken below one of the ventilation grills. When Colarusso said that someone had cleaned the grills in her office, Guffrovich denied that the vents had been cleaned. Colarusso insisted that Guffrovich had had the vents cleaned.[12] Colarusso told Guffrovich that Supervisor McHale had told her that the laborers had cleaned the vents over the weekend. Colarusso told Guffrovich of seeing threads of cloth on the grating on the vent showing that some cloth had been used to clean the vents. When Guffrovich said she knew nothing of it, Colarusso said that Guffrovich had cleaned the grills over the weekend but Guffrovich denied it (Tr. 338–340; 447–449). I do not credit Colarusso's testimony that she only said that McHale told her he had cleaned the vents. I find that she accused Guffrovich of cleaning the vents (Tr. 108–109). At this time, Richardson was using air pumps in the medical department testing for arsenic.

Later in the day, Richardson (without Guffrovich) came to the medical office to check the air pumps. Michaelene Lyons, the assistant nurse, was present. Richardson and Colarusso spoke of the tests in January that Del Cragle had taken and Colarusso asked Richardson why Respondent's Toledo laboratory, a high quality laboratory, could not detect arsenic whereas the Kirby Health Center could. Richardson said that the older equipment at the Toledo laboratory was not sensitive enough to pick up the arsenic. I do not credit Richardson's further testimony that Colarusso, half whispering, then told him that she and Michaelene Lyons had come [12] Colarusso testified that she noticed that the vents had been cleaned in the medical department on the morning of 10 March (Monday). She said she telephoned Maintenance Supervisor McHale that morning and asked him to stop by. She testified that, on the same morning, when he came to her office, she asked him whether the vents were all cleaned in the medical department and who had cleaned them (Tr. 580–582). According to Colarusso, McHale told her that the laborers had cleaned the vents and that they were starting to clean all the vents in the plant. As will be noted in the text, when Shank, on 18 March, later summoned McHale to confront Colarusso concerning whether the laborers or McHale had cleaned the vents or whether he had told Colarusso that he had cleaned the vents, McHale credibly testified that (a) Colarusso had asked him whether he had cleaned the vents over the weekend and he had told her that he had not (Tr. 376); that (b) apparently about 1 week later, at 10 a.m. on 18 March 1986, Peggy Guffrovich telephoned him and asked him if he had cleaned the vents in the medical office and he had told her that he had not (Tr. 375–376); and that (c) later in the day, on 18 March 1986, he told Shank, Colarusso, and Guffrovich, for the third time, when he was called into Shank's office, that he had not cleaned the vents in the medical office and, looking directly at Colarusso, said that he had told Colarusso that he had not cleaned the vents (Tr. 298; 375). Shank testified that Colarusso then said that she must have "misunderstood" and that the confrontation ended (Tr. 298). When Colarusso testified in rebuttal, she did not deny Shank's testimony or attempt to explain it away. For instance, she did not say that she told Shank that she "misunderstood," only to save McHale embarrassment or that McHale was untruthful. On this record, I credit Shank and find that McHale never told Colarusso that he cleaned the vents; nor did Guffrovich ever tell Colarusso that McHale cleaned the vents or that she had ordered him to do so. I make no finding regarding who actually cleaned the vents. This McHale testimony appears again later in the text.

in early over the weekend and cleaned the grills on the air vents. I do not credit Richardson in such testimony (although I find that he immediately told this to Guffrovich who then told Shank) because nurse Michaelene Lyons, an employee presently employed by Respondent and a witness called by Respondent, credibly testified contrary to Richardson's testimony: whereas Richardson testified that Colarusso had whispered, in a serious tone, that she and Michaelene Lyons had cleaned the vents, Michaelene Loyons testified that Colarusso actually told him, in a facetious tone: "Well, Michaelene and I must have come in to clean the vents over the weekend" (Tr. 557). Richardson, in rebuttal, testified that Colarusso did not use a facetious tone (Tr. 648) and specifically stated that he thought that Michaelene Lyons was mistaken in her testimony. He could not explain how she came to the conclusion that Colarusso was facetious in making her statement to Richardson (Tr. 649).[13]

Still later on 18 March, or on the next morning, there was a third conversation between Richardson and Colarusso. In this third conversation, not mentioned by Colarusso but testified particularly to by Richardson, Colarusso allegedly told him that employees other than Debbie Savoia had arsenic poisoning and not to trust Guffrovich and Shank concerning the arsenic exposures, the arsenic levels, and test results. Richardson testified that Colarusso told him that "they" had been out to get her since 1971; and that she was the only person in the plant who was truly concerned about the health and welfare of the employees. Richardson allegedly told her that he could not believe that Shank and Guffrovich were not concerned with the health and welfare of the employees in the plant; and that although Richardson knew them only for 8 months, he considered them trustworthy (Tr. 344–345). In rebuttal, Colarusso denied most of this testimony (Tr. 588 et seq.) and asserted that to make such statements to a high divisional supervisor, but a stranger to the rigid plant "chain of command," would be "putting her head in the guillotine" (Tr. 617).

I specifically discredit Richardson's testimony concerning this alleged conversation except that Colarusso said that Savoia and other employees had symptoms of arsenic poisoning, and I cannot credit his testimony, nor Shank's lame corroboration, that he mentioned such a conversation to Shank (except that Savoia and other employees had arsenic symptoms) sometime between 18 and 20 March. Had such an underlying conversation been reported to Shank—from a divisional official—as I view the evidence developed in this case and the analysis hereafter made, Shank would have disciplined or even discharged Colarusso on the spot or at least thereafter mentioned such a devastating show of disloyalty to her in one of several subsequent disciplinary interviews. He would not silently tolerate such derrogatory statements concerning (even truthful) accusations of untrustworthiness of Guffrovich and himself regarding the health and welfare of the 1000 employees in the plant. Nothing in Shank's testimony in later disciplinary interviews relates to a Colarusso accusation of untrustworthiness, and Guffrovich, who was present at various subsequent disciplinary interviews with Colarusso, does not suggest the existence of such an alleged statement by Colarusso. On the other hand, as noted here, I have credited Shank covering a later "tirade" by Colarusso concerning actions showing Respondent's alleged historic desire to "get" Colarusso. This later matter was never denied by Colarusso in rebuttal.

G. The Disciplinary Interview on the Afternoon of 18 March[14]

In the afternoon of 18 March, Guffrovich telephoned Colarusso and told her that Shank wanted to see her in his office. When Colarusso got there, she found Guffrovich in the office. Shank told her that disciplinary action was going to be taken against her for insubordination; and that the discipline would be that the 6-percent April pay raise would be denied to her. He told her that she was a valuable asset to the Company and he did not want to lose her. Colarusso credibly testified that he then told her that he might have to take further action against her and would let her think about it (Tr. 114). I credit Colarusso and do not credit Shank's assertion that he wanted to put the whole matter to rest ("put the whole issue to bed") (Tr. 293) and did not mention that even with Colarusso's false accusations against Guffrovich (cleaning the vents), and her going outside the chain of command to OSHA, he had no intention of discharging her—even with the "lies"—prior to the 18 March meeting (Tr. 291–293). It was the events that arose during the 18 March meeting, including her false assertion that she acted on Garcia-Pons' suggestion in contacting OSHA, that, Shank testified, caused the suspension and discharge commencing 20 March. It was the "lies" that came out at the 18 March interview that caused him to notify Plant Manager Townsend and tell him that the Colarusso matter had not been "put to bed." Townsend did not testify and did not corroborate such a Shank phone call.

Shank testified that as a result of the 18 March interview, however, he decided to investigate further (a) why Colarusso called OSHA; (b) why she went outside with the samples; and (c) the cleaning of the air vents.

After the meeting, apparently on the morning of 19 March, Richardson told him that Colarusso said other employees had arsenic symptoms (Tr. 305–306) and Garcia-Pons, in the late afternoon of 19 March, was called in by Shank and denied advising her to call OSHA (Tr. 478–495).[15]

[13] Richardson testified that he made notes (later destroyed but used to support a later memorandum) of this conversation with Colarusso and thereafter immediately told Guffrovich of what Colarusso had allegedly whispered and also mentioned it to Shank after telling Guffrovich (Tr. 405–406; 342). Guffrovich, a credible witness, corroborated that Richardson told her what Colarusso allegedly said (Tr. 449) but, of course, was not present at the event. Shank could not explain why he failed to testify about this matter at a later state unemployment compensation hearing where he testified to various Colarusso untruths (Tr. 517–519).

[14] The dating and chronology of events occurring in interviews 18–20 March involving Colarusso, Shank, and Guffrovich are in some dispute. The above chronology is an attempt to resolve certain inconsistencies. In any case, I conclude that the precise dates of the occurrences are not decisive.

[15] Garcia-Pons denied advising her to contact OSHA but admitted that she showed him the Kirby Hospital report. Shank, when asked if he

Continued

H. The Disciplinary Interview of 19 March

In the afternoon of 19 March, Guffrovich called Colarusso again and told her to come to Shank's office. Guffrovich was present. Shank told her that not only was she going to lose the pay raise, but she would be possibly terminated. He asked her why she had gone to OSHA in spite of Respondent's formidable in-house expertise (Tr. 297) and had spoken to Garcia-Pons concerning the Kirby Hospital Center test which showed 220 micrograms of arsenic and had not discussed it with Shank. Colarusso said that she had spoken to Garcia-Pons because he was "logical and methodical" and that he had told her to speak to OSHA to find out what the numbers meant and then to drop the matter if there was a negligible showing. Colarusso added that although she had been very discreet in contacting OSHA, she had a right to do so and even to accompany an OSHA inspector to the place of plant contamination (Tr. 120).

When Shank asked her for the names of other employees suffering from arsenic symptoms (Richardson had informed him of his 18 March conversations with Colarusso), she said she had heard of it but knew no names. Shank then said that he wanted a copy of the Kirby Hospital Center results; that she had shown a copy to Garcia-Pons; and that Colarusso had promised to give a copy to Guffrovich but had failed to deliver. Colarusso told Shank that she had not promised to give it to Guffrovich but only said that she would "see about it" (Tr. 117). Shank then asked why Colarusso had called Guffrovich a liar concerning Guffrovich cleaning the vents and Colarusso said that she had not accused her of lying about the cleaning of the vents. Turning to Guffrovich, Colarusso said that if Guffrovich told Shank of an accusation of Guffrovich being a liar, Guffrovich herself was lying.

Colarusso said that Maintenance Supervisor McHale told her that his laborers had cleaned the vents in the medical office and the cafeteria. Guffrovich then said that she had spoken to McHale and he had denied cleaning the vents. When Colarusso insisted that McHale told her that he had cleaned the vents, Shank telephoned for McHale's presence. Shank then asked him if he told Colarusso that he had cleaned the vents. McHale, speaking directly to Colarusso, said—with force—that he had not cleaned the vents and earlier had told that to Colarusso (Tr. 298; 374). McHale testified that at 9 a.m. Colarusso asked him if he had cleaned the vents over the weekend and he told her he had not (Tr. 375–376); that at 10 a.m., Guffrovich asked him if he had cleaned the vents in the medical department and he told her that he had not (Tr. 372–373); and that, in the afternoon, when, in the presence of Colarusso and Guffrovich, Shank asked if Colarusso was correct when she said that McHale cleaned the vents, McHale said to Colarusso (Tr. 298; 374): "No, G—d damn it. No. And I told you so."

This confrontation does not appear in Colarusso's direct examination and, more significantly, is not denied in her extensive rebuttal. Moreover, in rebuttal, she failed to deny Shank's testimony that, at this point, she told Shank that: "I must have misunderstood [McHale]." (Tr. 298.) Under these circumstances, I credit McHale, Guffrovich, and Shank regarding this incident and conclude that Colarusso was not credible in testifying that McHale told her that he had cleaned the vents (Tr. 581–582). McHale credibly testified that vents in the medical area had not been cleaned for 5 years (Tr. 378). As noted above, I make no findings about who cleaned the vents.

When Shank then asked her for a copy of the Kirby Health Center test results, Colarusso told him that she had torn up the copy and thrown it away. In fact, while this was technically true, Colarusso admitted that she had other copies.

It was after this meeting, as noted above, that Shank called in Garcia-Pons who denied advising her to go to OSHA.

I. Disciplinary Meeting of 20 March

On the morning of 20 March, Guffrovich and Shank came to Colarusso's office and Shank asked her what the 220 micrograms meant. Colarusso said that the 220 micrograms showed a negligible amount of arsenic in the dust according to what OSHA had told her. Colarusso told Shank that he was harassing her;[16] that ever since 1971, Shank and his two predecessors (Tr. 496) had been out to "get her" concerning an incident involving a 1971 industrial injury.

Shank told her that he did not know what she was talking about insofar as the 1971 incident went. He told her that if there had been a plot to fire her and if that plot had been passed from one industrial relations director to each successor, they had somehow omitted informing Shank because he knew nothing about it. Colarusso then told him (Tr. 496–497) that she wished the whole thing would end and that it would be better for her to die from arsenic.

In a second meeting of 20 March, in the afternoon (Tr. 497), Guffrovich called Colarusso into Shank's office where Shank told her that he was bringing the matter to a conclusion; that her behavior in the past week had been insubordinate, improper, and unethical; that the would have fired Garcia-Pons or retaliated against him if he believed that he had told Colarusso to contact OSHA testified that he could not answer that question and that he did not know whether he would fire or retaliate against him (Tr. 514–515). His demeanor leads me to conclude, and the record shows, that Respondent was not pleased with Colarusso's or any other employee's contact of OSHA. Although Garcia-Pons testified concerning his 6 March conversation with Colarusso, he failed to testify concerning his 19 March conversation with Shanks.

[16] Colarusso told Shank and Guffrovich that they were harassing her, and had been constantly harassing her. Although she did not then tell the alleged real reason for such conduct to them, she testified that it was because of her refusal to take early retirement, Respondent, prior to this time, had been seeking to reduce its payroll by 20 percent. Respondent was offering eligible employees early retirement complete with a bonus system which, in Colarusso's case, would provide full salary for a year. Shank credibly testified that it was Respondent's plan to seek voluntary early retirement from certain employees but that, failing this, there would be involuntary layoffs in order to meet the mandated 20-percent reduction in payroll. Shank also credibly testified that he had earlier told Colarusso to stop advising employees to reject Respondent's offer of voluntary retirement because they could receive severence pay and unemployment compensation if they were involuntarily separated. Shank told Colarusso to stop giving such advice to employees because it was contrary to company goals (Tr. 295–297).

Company had patiently waited for a copy of the test results which had not been forthcoming; that based on her actions, the Company could no longer entrust her with the duties of head nurse; and that Shank was placing her on suspension and that she should report back in 2 weeks for further disposition. He also told her that Respondent would take legal means to get the Kirby Health Center results. Shank apparently did not discharge her on 20 March in order to permit an interval in which he might get a copy of the report.

Thereafter on 31 March, Shank sent a letter to the Kirby Health Center (R. Exh. 6)[17] asking for the results, but on 19 May, Kirby Health Center (R. Exh. 7) refused to divulge them because of the absence of Colarusso's consent.

At the same time, as one of the reasons for discharge, Shank told Colarusso that he could not trust her because she had written an anonymous letter to a local newspaper accusing the Company of nepotism. Colarusso denied ever having written the letter. Respondent has neither pursued this assertion nor mentioned it in its 8 April letter terminating her nor in its brief. It no longer mentions the letter as a basis for discipline.

Two weeks later, on 4 April, Colarusso reported to the plant but was told that she was still on suspension and, on 8 April, Colarusso went to the plant for work but she was handed a letter of termination (G.C. Exh. 6), the substance of which appears infra.

According to Colarusso, in the 20 March afternoon interview, Shank gave three reasons for terminating and suspending her: (a) for writing the anonymous letter; (b) for calling Guffrovich a liar; and (c) because he "wanted that [arsenic] dust. That dust belongs to me." Colarusso told him that the Kirby Health Center had the dust. She particularly testified that Shank, at that time, did not again ask for a copy of the Kirby Health Center report. I find Colarusso's testimony irrelevant, if true, because Colarusso had previously testified (Tr. 118–119) that Shank, at least on 19 March, had asked for a copy of the test results and that Colarusso had told him that she had torn up the copy and thrown it away, a deceptive answer since she had other copies.

Colarusso testified that in the 19 years she had been employed as a nurse by the Company,[18] she knew that the Company regularly monitored the environment inside and outside the plant for hazardous substances. She also testified that she was acting in her professional capacity as a nurse for Owens Illinois in collecting, and then sending, the sample to the Kirby Health Center notwithstanding she did not send or submit a bill to the Company for this conduct; and that she took the dust sample of 12 February because she was concerned about her own symptoms and because Debbie Savoia was sick (Tr. 160). Colarusso also testified she did not show Shanks a copy of the Kirby Health Center report because she believed that it would be evidence to support Shank in his effort to force her to take early retirement (Tr. 210). Colarusso knew that 13 employees were slotted to take early retirement (Tr. 210).

I have substantially credited Colarusso's testimony over that of Richardson, especially regarding the alleged whispering of her admission of cleaning the vents and also regarding Colarusso telling Richardson that Guffrovich and Shanks were not to be trusted. Such an accusation does not appear in either Shank's testimony (to whom Richardson allegedly relayed this information) or in the termination letter that Shank sent to Colarusso listing the reasons for her being terminated or in Shank's subsequent testimony in an unemployment compensation hearing. As I have mentioned above, had Colarusso made such a defamatory statement about Guffrovich and Shank, I believe that she would have been disciplined if not discharged on the spot on 19 March after Richardson reported it.

J. Elements of Colarusso's Rebuttal Testimony

1. Among other things in her rebuttal, Colarusso testified that Shank had made particular issues of both her saying that there was arsenic in the plant and her failure to seek him out, particularly to tell him of her finding. She was asked why, in the disciplinary interviews, she said to him (Tr. 624): "Why would you say [to Shank] 'is this what you don't want me to tell you about'—referring to the presence of arsenic—when, at the same time, Shank was admittedly asking her for a copy of the Kirby Hospital test results. She answered that Shank was making "such a do about my having that sample and that 220 [microgram analysis]" (Tr. 623). When particularly asked why she was asserting that Shank did not want to hear about arsenic in the plant at the same time that he was asking for, and she was refusing to submit an available copy of, the test results, she answered (Tr. 624): "Well, I felt he should have trusted me. I told him what the figure was. . . . Jorge [Garcia-Pons] had seen this." When asked whether she did not think that giving a copy of the report to Shank, her supervisor, was a matter of importance to Respondent, Colarusso admitted that she thought it was important. In particular, she admitted that notwithstanding her opinion, based on the OSHA contact, that the 220 micrograms of arsenic per gram of dust was a "negligible" amount of arsenic in the dust, she was sure that Shank should have seen a copy of the report (Tr. 626). Such a Colarusso statement is tantamount to an admission of insubordination.

2. In rebuttal, on the third day of the hearing, in attempting to support her credibility, Colarusso for the first time testified that she had forgotten that she had kept a daily log of events commencing 6 March and ending with her termination. Since her testimony and credibility had been continuously and sometimes successfully attacked, the evident intent of using the log (G.C. Exh 15) was to bolster her veracity and overall credibility after attack. Regarding this daily log, she testified, obdurately and falsely, that (1) the back of the log was kept on a daily basis when the evidence showed that she had kept the back of the log, not on a daily basis, but had written it as a summation at a time other than on a daily basis; (2) in keeping the log she had no intention of using it as evidence (Tr. 610) but, almost at the same time, she testified that she knew that whatever happened, she was going to record the events for use "as a main source" (Tr. 611); and (3) she evenly spaced the events recorded at the back of the log to get them on a single page when it was evident that she did not know, when she started recording them on the back page, how many events were to be recorded so that they could be fitted in on a single page.

[17] In particular, the letter shows that Shank was aware by 13 March (apparently based on the Guffrovich-Nardone report of Colarusso's statements of that morning) that Colarusso "or other salaried employees . . . presented . . . [unauthorized] samples . . . for analysis."

[18] Respondent consistently rated Colarusso as a "highly effective" employee (Tr. 307).

What started out as Respondent's attempt to impeach Colarusso's credibility on a technically material (but by no means a collateral) matter, yet one that might not necessarily reach vital elements of her overall credibility, soon developed into Colarusso's clearly false, but unshakable, insistence that she kept the diary on a daily basis. Her self-contradictions and the implausibility of her testimony demonstrated that she was untruthfully describing the log, its purpose, and perhaps its contents. Thus, what started out as a relatively minor matter, eventually developed, over a lengthy examination caused principally by her own implausibility, into a substantial impediment, leading to my reevaluating any and all contradicted testimony.

Lastly, it should be noted that Respondent's termination letter (G.C. Exh. 6) to Colarusso, dated 8 April 1986, lists many reasons for the discharge, some of which are true and some untrue. Among them are (1) counseling an employee (i.e., Deborah Savoia) that she was being made ill by toxic levels of arsenic; (2) disregarding results of Respondent's air tests that showed no unsafe levels of chemicals in the office area; (3) her disregard of advice of the plant physician regarding potential exposures in the office area. In addition, (4) she acted without authorization in obtaining dust samples and transmitting them to the Kirby Health Center and (5) purposely withheld the Kirby Health Center report from management; (6) she questioned maintenance supervision about a citation received from the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources accusing management of pumping arsenic into the office system despite test results to the contrary; (7) she lied to her supervisor concerning the arsenic level, being "200," as "negligible."

At the hearing, however, as reasons supporting the discharge, Respondent relied principally on Colarusso's untruthfulness in three instances[19] and her refusal to provide a copy of the Kirby Health Center report (Tr. 504–507). Shank admitted that the three "lies," dispositive of the discharge, were not mentioned in the above termination letter (Tr. 510). On the other hand, two of the three "lies" were first mentioned in his testimony in the unemployment compensation hearing on 29 May 1986, 2 months after the discharge letter.

[19] The three alleged "lies" (Tr. 494–495) were: (a) accusing Guffrovich of ordering McHale to clean the vents, switching to McHale cleaning the vents, and then saying she had "misunderstood"; (b) Garcia-Pons truthfully contradicted her assertion that he had suggested contacting OSHA; and (c) refusing to identify the other employees displaying arsenic symptoms she mentioned to Richardson.

IV. DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSIONS

A. The Prima Facie Case

Respondent, in citing Board precedent, particularly Meyers Industries, 268 NLRB 493 (1984) (Meyers I) remanded sub nom. Prill v. NLRB, 755 F.2d 941 (D.C. Cir. 1985), cert. denied 474 U.S. 948 (1985), reaffd. 281 NLRB 882 (1986) (Meyers II), enfd. 835 F.2d 1481 (D.C. Cir. 1987), argues in its brief that (a) Colarusso was not engaged in concerted protected activities, and (b) in any event, was discharged because she was caught in blatant untruths and because of her insubordinate refusal to turn over the test report from the Kirby Health Center (R. Br. 5–6).

To determine whether the Board would find that Colarusso was engaged in "concerted activities" and, ultimately, in concerted activities protected by Section 7 of the Act, I note that the Board has determined, in its Meyers Industries I, above, that:

> In general, to find that an employee's activity to be "concerted," we shall require that it be engaged in with or on the authority of other employees, and not solely by and on behalf of the employee himself. Once the activity is found to be concerted, an 8(a)(1) violation will be found if, in addition, the employer knew of the concerted nature of the employee's activity, the concerted activity was protected by the Act, and the adverse employment action at issue (e.g., discharge) was motivated by the employee's protected concerted activity. [Meyers I, 268 NLRB at 497.]

A corollary to the above Meyers Industries rule appears in Monarch Water Systems, 271 NLRB 558 fn. 3 (1984), in which the Board held (Chairman Dotson dissenting) that:

> Threats made and actions taken by an employer against an employee based on the employer's belief that the employee engaged in or intended to engage in protected concerted activity are unlawful even though the employee did not in fact engage in or intend to engage in such activity.[20]

There can be little question that the effort of Colarusso in contacting OSHA, whether or not encouraged by Garcia-Pons, and in separately sending out the sample of dust, with Savoia's knowing assistance, to the Kirby Hospital were each a protected activity because they each related to a health matter concerning potentially toxic working conditions in Respondent's plant. Compare: NLRB v. Washington Aluminum Co., 370 U.S. 9 (1962), Serendippity-Un-Ltd., 263 NLRB 768, 774–775 (1982), Alleluia Cushion Co., 221 NLRB 999 (1975), and Meyers Industries, supra, with Every Woman's Place, 282 NLRB 413 (1986), and Tamara Foods, 258 NLRB 1307 (1981). The facts that the taking of the sample and the OSHA contact were unauthorized are not material under the Act. Eastex, Inc. v. NLRB, 437 U.S. 556, 566 (1978).

[20] The Board has subsequently cited Monarch Water Systems favorably for the same proposition in Daniel Construction Co., 277 NLRB 795 (1985). Accord: Independent Stations Co., 284 NLRB 394(1987). Thus, it would appear that under Monarch Water Systems, supra, the dispositive issue with regard to an employer's motive in a discharge under these circumstances hinges on the Respondent's perception of whether the employee or employees are engaged in concerted protected activities rather than on the fact of whether they were so engaged. Alternatively, regardless of the employer's perception, a violation occurs if the employer discharges an employee for engaging in concerted protected activities which, in turn, hinges on whether the employees were actually engaged in concerted protected activities and the employer knew it. See Independent Stations Co., supra.

Regarding whether this protected activity is also concerted, the evidence shows that Respondent perceived that Colarusso was engaged in concerted activity. For, as appears in Respondent's 31 March letter to the Kirby Hospital Center (R. Exh. 6) demanding a copy of the test results, Respondent stated:

> On or about 13 March 1986, Owens-Illinois became aware of the fact that Ms. Louis Colarusso, or other salaried employees, acting without authorization and on their own behalf, acquired sample(s) of materials from our operation and presented these sample(s) to Kirby Memorial Health Center for analysis. [Emphasis added.]
>
> . . . .
>
> I would also request that Kirby Memorial Center provide me with the results of all sample analysis submitted to you by Ms. Colarusso or other unauthorized employees. [Emphasis added.]

I therefore conclude, on the basis of the above letter, that Respondent, as early as 13 March 1986, perceived that more than one sample had been sent to Kirby Health Center for analysis; and that Colarusso was acting with other employees (Zabrovia, Slavoski, and Savoia) in submitting these samples to the hospital for analysis. In fact, she was. Each of these employees (Zabrovia, Slavoski, and Savoia) knew that other, co-employees were concerned about dust problems and each collected and then submitted the samples with such knowledge. In such circumstances, I conclude that Respondent perceived that its employees were acting "together," therefore "in concert" and therefore that they were engaged in "concerted activities" within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act. Meyers Industries I and II, supra. In addition, the employees were actually engaged in a concerted activity.

Having already concluded that the employees were also engaged in protected activities because they were concerned with their health in the Pittson plant, I draw the inference from Respondent's letter to the Kirby Health Center (R. Exh. 6) that the concerted activity of these employees in submitting the samples was for the purpose of analyzing the samples to see if there were noxious or corrosive substances in them. I therefore need to go no further to conclude that, within the meaning of Tamara Foods, supra (1981), Monarch Water Systems, supra, and Independent Stations Co., supra, Respondent knew that Colarusso and other employees were engaged in protected, concerted activities within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act when, without authorization, they "acquired sample(s) of materials from our operation and presented these sample(s) to Kirby Memorial Health Center for analysis."[21]

The underlying facts, of course, show that on or about 12 February 1986, Colarusso, Savioa, and Slavoski submitted the samples because of Slavoski's complaints, Colarusso's alleged symptoms, and Savoia's urinalysis showing arsenic toxicity, and because of coughing, headaches, and sore eyes in the machine shop department. Indeed, in late December or early January, when, after Debbie Savoia had visited the company doctor concerning her arsenic poisoning, Colarusso told Peggy Guffrovich of the reason why Debbie Savioa had seen the doctor, Guffrovich said that she knew about it.

Furthermore, Respondent apparently knew or believed, as a result of Nardone and Guffrovich reporting back to Shank on their 13 March conversation with Guffrovich (they reported back on the day they spoke to Colarusso, 13 March), that more than one sample had been submitted to the Kirby Health Center. There would be no reason for Shanks to state (in his letter to Kirby Health Center of 31 March) that he believed that on 13 March more than one sample may have been submitted if that were not then known to him.

B. Respondent's Motive for the Refusal to Grant the Pay Increase, for the Suspension and for the Ultimate Termination of Colarusso

I conclude that, in the prima facie case, two elements of animus regarding Colarusso's engaging in the protected concerted activities are manifested in the record. The uncontradicted and credited Colarusso testimony is that Respondent maintains a strict "chain of command" system of subordinates reporting only to their superiors. Similarly, Respondent is adverse to its employees contacting OSHA concerning perceived unhealthy working conditions especially in view of Respondent's in-house analytical expertise. (1) Respondent resented Colarusso violating its strict corporate system, manifested in the Pittston plant, of the "chain of command." (Tr. 588.) Thus Colarusso's uncontradicted and credited testimony convinces me that Respondent maintained such a strict chain of command system in the Pittston plant that it would amount to an employee, as Colarusso testified, placing her neck "in the guillotine" if she circumvented the chain of command by going around the employee's own immediate supervisor. This had been true in Colarusso's 19 years of experience with the Company. Wholly consistent with, and as I view the evidence, dispositive of this conclusion is Peggy Guffrovich's testimony (Tr. 443, et seq.) that she was "stunned" when Colarusso told her that she had submitted a dust sample to the Kirby Health Center for testing of toxic substances and had gone outside the Company for this purpose. In a similar vein, as Shanks testified, when Guffrovich and Nardone reported back to him of their 13 March conversation with Colarusso, they reported that Colarusso had taken a dust sample and submitted it to an "outside laboratory"

[21] As noted above, this was one of the reasons listed for the discharge (G.C. Exh. 6) and constitutes evidence of unlawful motivation under the present facts.

(Tr. 284). Shank's repeated questioning of Colarusso on this point shows that, like Guffrovich, he was incredulous that she had done so when Respondent had such great "in house expertise" (Tr. 297; 534). (2) Perhaps an even more significant support for a finding of Respondent's animus is that Colarusso not only violated the chain of command and went outside to the Kirby Health Center with a dust sample showing toxic conditions inside the plant, but she went to OSHA to determine the significance of the level of arsenic.

Shank testified that Respondent would not look favorably on a company official "blowing the whistle" and going to OSHA (Tr. 515) and admitted that it would be a "serious matter" for an employee to report the Company's arsenic violations (Tr. 514). While Shank understandably testified that it is not company policy to discharge employees for going to OSHA (Tr. 514), he admitted that for Colarusso, Respondent's nurse, part of Respondent's "safety team," to report the matter to OSHA, especially before the going to the "in house people" was "a little treasonous" (Tr. 534). He could not—would not—answer whether, if Garcia-Pons suggested that Calarusso contact OSHA, he would be discharged.

I therefore conclude on the basis of the uncontradicted testimony of Colarusso, and the admissions of Guffrovich and Shank, that Respondent harbored animus against Colarusso, both for sending the dust samples to the Kirby Health Center and contacting OSHA concerning the significance of the Kirby Health Center arsenic report.

Regarding the timing of the termination, it appears that Respondent was fully aware of Colarusso engaging in protected concerted activities by 13 March 1986. Shank then conducted at least two telephone conversations with management officials both within and outside the Pittston plant[22] concerning discipline of Colarusso. Colarusso was told of Respondent's decision to discipline her on 18 March by depriving her of the 6-percent pay raise and on 20 March of the decision to suspend and discharge her.

By 13 March 1986, Nardone and Guffrovich had reported to Shank that Colarusso had, on her own, without authority, collected and dispatched a dust sample to Kirby Health Center for analysis and had thereafter contacted OSHA to determine the significance of the numbers from the Kirby Hospital Center report (Tr. 284). By 14 March, the next day, Colarusso had reneged on her promise to give Guffrovich a copy of the Kirby Health Center report (G.C. Exh. 7). Since there were two telephone conversations between Shank and higher officials, including Respondent's attorney, in the period of 13 through 18 March (in which Shank notified them that Colarusso had contacted OSHA and was telling employees of arsenic in the ventillation system, Tr. 285–287), I find that all company officials, certainly no later than 16 or 17 March, were aware of the facts as stated above, concerning Colarusso's activities and Colarusso's refusal to turn over a copy of the report. After the 18 March deprivation of the 6-percent pay raise, Shank notified her on 20 March that she was to be suspended pending discharge. Thus the period between Respondent first learning of Colarusso engaging in protected concerted activities (13 March) and the determination to suspend and discharge her (20 March) occurred in a period of 1 week. The decision to discharge was the result of telephone conversations with higher management during that period. I therefore conclude, on the basis of the nature of Colarusso's activities, Respondent's animus, and the speed of Respondent's action, that the General Counsel has proved a prima facie case that Respondent discriminated against Colarusso in denying the pay increase on 18 March and ultimately terminated the employment of Colarusso (commencing 20 March) because of her protected concerted activities of sending the samples to Kirby Health Center and contacting OSHA, which actions constitute violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Meyers II, supra.

C. Respondent's Defense

In Respondent's timely brief, it takes the position that Colarusso was not engaged in concerted activity within the meaning of the Act. As part of the discussion of the prima facie case above, I have found to the contrary, and reject Respondent's position that Colarusso was concerned only for her personal safety and her own fear that she was suffering from arsenic poisoning in submitting the dust sample to the Kirby Health Center and in contacting OSHA. Respondent's perception of Colarusso's conduct was that she was acting with others, as indeed she was.

Respondent, following Shank's testimony, next takes the position that Respondent desired only to deprive Colarusso of her 6-percent pay increase as a result of conversations between Shank and other top management officials in the period 13 through 18 March. Respondent states that it was only events, i.e., lies and continued insubordination, which came to light during the meetings of 18 and 19 March 1986. The above Respondent position is not consistent with the position as set forth in the Respondent's termination letter of 8 April 1986, where no lies are mentioned. Respondent has also abandoned Shank's 20 March assertion that Colarusso was being discharged, in part, because she wrote an anonymous letter to the local newspaper accusing the plant of sponsoring nepotism. Such omissions and shifting defenses do not inspire confidence in the reasons advanced for the discharge. That "lies," as a reason for discharge first appear 2 months later in the unemployment compensation hearing, only makes matters worse. Such late rationalization smacks of careful rethinking—perhaps a lawyer's intervention.

It was clear, as Shank testified (Tr. 300 et seq.) that Colarusso's conduct prior to 18 March was insufficient to cause her being suspended and discharged; and it was Shank's and Respondent's intent to discipline Colarusso, on the basis of her conduct prior to 18 March, only with the deprivation of the 6-percent wage increase (R. Br. 6; Tr. 293). It was that further lies came out of the 18

[22] None of the company officials in Toledo who participated in the decision to terminate Colarusso were called to testify and therefore give the reasons for the termination. Shank testified that he alone did not make the determination to suspend and then terminate Colarusso after depriving her for the 6-percent pay raise.

March meeting (Tr. 291 et seq.). The conduct that formed the basis of the decision to deprive her only of her 6-percent pay raise included not only the 13 March report that Shanks had received back from Nardone and Guffrovich regarding the submission of the sample to Kirby Health Center and the contacting of OSHA (Tr. 297), but Colarusso's conduct in going to McHale and asking about the DER citation, her false accusation of Guffrovich in cleaning the vent, and the conversation with Diane Gubbiotti. Moreover, at the 18 March meeting, various bits of Colarusso's conduct were also taken into account and were deemed by Shanks to be insufficient to cause discipline further than the deprivation of the pay increase. These included Colarusso accusing Shanks of harassing her over Colarusso's conduct in advising employees not to take early retirement even though Shanks had previously told her that it was contrary to company policy for them to do so (Tr. 294 et seq.).

Respondent contends, however, that it was Colarusso's conduct commencing in the meeting of 18 March and thereafter that caused Respondent to terminate her. This conduct included blatant untruths of three particular types (a) lying in saying that Guffrovich cleaned the vents or Bill McHale told her that laborers had cleaned the vents; (b) regarding the fact that Garcia-Pons told her to call OSHA; and (c) telling Richardson that employees other than Deborah Savoia showed symptoms of arsenic poisoning and telling Shank that she did not know who they were (Tr. 495–496). Shanks testified at the instant hearing that these "lies," in conjunction with Colarusso's adamant refusal to surrender a copy of the Kirby Health Center report, demonstrated that Colarusso, part of Respondent's health team, was a liar who could no longer be trusted in employment. As above noted, the 8 April discharge letter is silent on "lies" as a basis for discharge; and at the 29 May unemployment compensation hearing, as the General Counsel points out (G.C. Br. 36), Shanks was equivocal on whether lies, alone, would have caused the discharge; and he nowhere relied on Colarusso's defamatory statements to Richardson at any time. I analyze the "lies" defense for principally remedial purposes.

1. Colarusso untruthfully testified regarding Bill McHale

In the meeting of 19 March, Guffrovich told Colarusso that she had spoken to McHale and McHale said that he had not cleaned the vents. This was after Colarusso denied accusing Guffrovich of having ordered the cleaning of the vents. When Colarusso then insisted that McHale told her that he cleaned the vents, Shank called in McHale and McHale, speaking to Colarusso, said: "No, G—d Damn it, I told you so." Colarusso, according to Shanks, answered: "I must have misunderstood." (Tr. 298.) In spite of Colarusso's extensive rebuttal testimony, Shanks' version of this Colarusso confrontation with Maintenance Supervisor Bill McHale on 19 March, while not corroborated by Guffrovich, and only partly corroborated by McHale, was never denied. Nothing in Guffrovich's or McHale's demeanor or testimony showed untrustworthiness. I therefore conclude on the basis of demeanor testimony, certainly bolstered by Colarusso's failure in rebuttal to contradict Shanks' testimony, that McHale and Guffrovich were, on this point, truthful witnesses; and that Colarusso was untruthful in her testimony that McHale told her on or about 10 March that the laborers cleaned the vents in the medical office. I also conclude that she falsely accused Peggy Guffrovich of directing McHale to clean the vents (Tr. 448–449). None of this appears in the 8 April 1986 discharge letter (G.C. Exh. 6) and I am persuaded that Respondent was not seriously concerned with it in discharging her. That the lies first became a defense at the 29 May unemployment compensation hearing, almost 2 months after the 8 April enumeration of reasons is significant.

2. The alleged lie concerning Garcia-Pons

Based on the intrinsic probabilities of the events, I was, and am, prepared to conclude that Colarusso was truthful and Garcia-Pons was untruthful with regard to whether Garcia-Pons suggested to Colarusso that she contact OSHA in order to get an interpretation of the significance of the arsenic numbers.[23] Thus, I do not credit Shank's testimony that in her 19 March conversation with Colarusso, he asked her why she had gone to OSHA (Tr. 291). Rather, I credit Colarusso (Tr. 115) that Shank asked her why she had first spoken to Garcia-Pons and not Shank. Thus, I conclude that by 19 March, Garcia-Pons already had informed Shank that Colarusso had sent a dust sample to Kirby Health Center for testing. When Colarusso then told him that her contacting OSHA was Garcia-Pons' suggestion, Shank called in Garcia-Pons and got a denial. Under ordinary circumstances, there would be no reason for Colarusso, as a result of a conversation with a long-time friend (whom she rescued from alcoholism) like Garcia-Pons, to independently seek out OSHA if the long-time friend suggested that she speak to Dr. Campenella or environmentalist Nardone. On the other hand, given Respondent's inhospitable attitude toward employees—particularly supervisors—particularly high supervisors—like Garcia-Pons who suggest that employees contact OSHA with regard to poisonous elements on Respondent's premises, there would be every reason for Garcia-Pons to seek to minimize his role once his connection to the OSHA matter was exposed. Hence, it is clearly consistent that between 6 March and 18 March, he would tell Shanks that Colarusso submitted the dust sample to Kirby Health Center and then deny to Shanks, on Shanks' later direct inquiry, that Garcia-Pons recommended the OSHA route to Colarusso.

In short, Colarusso did not disclose to Shanks that she had contacted Garcia-Pons. Rather, it was Shanks who asked her why she had first spoken to Garcia-Pons about the "220." I conclude that even if Garcia-Pons denied to Shank suggesting OSHA to Colarusso, and even if Shank believed him, such a Colarusso "lie" would be unlawful reason to form a basis for termination. For Colarusso did have a right to go to OSHA. And discharging her for lying that her conduct was authorized by Garcia-Pons—has the same effect as discharging an employee for any other extraneous "lie" concerning engaging in protected activities: discharging an employee for lying about attendance at a union meeting. In any event because this lie was not mentioned in the 8 April 1986 discharge letter (G.C. Exh. 6), and notwithstanding that it was mentioned in Shank's unemployment compensation testimony 2 months later, I do not regard it as a matter on which Respondent seriously relied in the discharge.

[23] This issue, of course, relates not only to credibility but to whether Shank relied on Garcia-Pons's version. Regardless of whether Garcia-Pons recommended that Colarusso contact OSHA, the fact that she did contact OSHA and that Respondent knew about it nevertheless constitutes part of the prima facie case.

3. The lies allegedly made to Terry Richardson

At the hearing, as I understood him, Shanks testified that the third problem was two lies that Richardson disclosed. The first was that Richardson told him on 18 March that Colarusso had admitted that she, herself, had cleaned the vents. Richardson also told him Colarusso knew of other employees, besides Savoia, who showed arsenic toxicity symptoms. Shanks testified that he believed Richardson when Richardson told him of these statements; and that McHale's contradiction, and Colarusso's failure to actually name other employees showing arsenic symptoms, fortified Shank's belief that Colarusso was an inveterate liar and untrustworthy of employment. (Tr. 517.)

Regarding these latter "lies" as support for the discharge, it is clear that (1) on the basis of Michaelene Lyons' credited contradiction of Richardson concerning Colarusso and the "facetious" admission (that Colarusso and/or Lyons had cleaned the vents), I conclude that Richardson was untruthful in that regard. I also regard Richardson as untruthful in his testimony that Colarusso told him that he should not trust either Guffrovich or Shank because they did not have the welfare of the employees in mind. As noted, Shank would have taken immediate action on such a report. He failed to do so. I credit Colarusso that such a statement would border on the irrational, especially when made to a stranger to the chain of command on which Respondent was so insistent and which Colarusso observed for 19 years (except where her own health was at issue and where she already knew that Debbie Savoia was sick with apparent arsenic poisoning). Nevertheless, it might be argued that regardless of Richardson's motives and credibility in making these reports to his superior, Shanks might in good faith, rely on Richardson's reports. Yet, given the alleged gravity attached to these "lies" by Respondent in the discharge of Colarusso, it is of obvious importance that Shanks, in his testimony before the Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation Commission hearing, nowhere mentioned either of these Richardson-based lies (Tr. 517).[24] Shanks' testimony as to why he omitted these Richardson-based lies from his testimony before the Unemployment Compensation Board, within 2 months of the discharge (29 May 1986) was merely that he could not explain it: "I don't know" (Tr. 517). Such an explanation is entirely unacceptable when, if Shank's testimony at the hearing is to be taken seriously, it formed such an important basis of the discharge.

Moreover, the lie concerning Colarusso and Lyons cleaning the vent does not appear in the discharge letter of 8 April (G.C. Exh. 6), not, perhaps even more important, does Richardson's report of other alleged defamatory statements by Colarusso ("don't trust Guffrovich and Shank") appear in any of the various bases of discharge. I therefore conclude that not only was Richardson falsely testfying with regard to his conversations with Colarusso but falsely relayed this information to Shank who, in any event, despite his testimony at the hearing failed to give it much, if any, weight in assigning them as reasons for discharge. Colarusso's alleged lies to Richardson allegedly formed one of three sets of Colarusso lies causing the discharge (Tr. 505). I do not believe Richardson's testimony and I do not believe Shank on the point. I conclude that, in any event, Respondent relied on a false basis for these lies and that if the "lies" were ever transmitted to Shank, they formed a false basis for the discharge. The fact that Shank never used the alleged "lies" in the discharge letter and two of them first appear in his Unemployment Compensation Board testimony, 2 months after the discharge, underlines the lack of force, at the time of the 20 March suspension and 8 April enumeration, which Respondent itself deemed the three "lies" to present. (Tr. 508–510.)

4. Colarusso's failure to deliver a copy of the Kirby Health Center report

The fourth and final support for Respondent's suspension and termination of Colarusso was her failure to deliver a copy of the report to Shanks on his demand. Shank testified that in Respondent's 8 April discharge letter (G.C. Exh. 6) he wrote that Colarusso "lied" about the results being "negligible" because she admitted that there were 220 micograms of arsenic per gram in the dust. Shank testified (Tr. 530) that even though the Company knew of the 220 micograms per gram in the dust sample, and even though he knew it was not an air sample (which would be the critical factor), Respondent did not know of the several other numbers and values that appeared in the report (G.C. Exh. 7) that Garcia-Pons had seen and told Shank about.[25] Thus Shank testified that, although he knew of the 220 microgram figure, he did not know of the three other figures. Shank was also concerned because the 220 microgram finding escaped Respondent's Del Cragle analysis. This was a further reason why Shank wanted the report.

Colarusso refused to turn over a copy of the report to Guffrovich on 13–14 March and again refused to turn it over on 18–20 March to Shank because of an irrelevant reason (because she feared that Shank would use it to further coerce her into taking early retirement). However, she later testified that she did not turn it over because she had already told Garcia-Pons what the figure was and she felt that Shank should have "trusted" her (Tr. 624). Whether "trusted her" refers to the figures or her conclusion (based on OSHA's estimate) that the arsenic concentration was "negligible" is not clear. In addition, she ultimately admitted that she herself thought that the report was a matter of importance to the Company (Tr. 624) and that she was sure that Shank should have been given a copy of the report (Tr. 626).[26] To refuse Shank's request, as I have observed, is insubordinate.

[24] At one juncture, Shank testified the "lie" was failing to divulge the names of employees with arsenic symptoms (Tr. 495); while later he testified that the "lie" was Colarusso whispering that she cleaned the vents. (Tr. 515).

[25] Garcia-Pons failed to testify regarding his 19 March interview with Shank. Shank's testimony on the event is not detailed.

On the other hand, as the General Counsel points out in his argument that the demand for the Kirby Health Center results was a mere pretext to cover Respondent's prior decision to discharge Colarusso for having gone outside the chain of command and contacting OSHA as part of a concerted protected activity, Respondent was clearly able to perform a similar test on dust which Colarusso had performed at the very same place and to satisfy itself concerning the possible danger emanating from the dust or any air borne dust. As a matter of fact, it did this very thing in the Richardson tests of 18 and 19 March 1986 and found the dust to be of insufficient toxicity to trigger further activities. Indeed, Respondent's use of Richardson's expertise and Colarusso's cooperation in his testing seems to me to make the Kirby report academic in large part and tends to support a finding that Shank's insistence on receiving the report was pretextual.

Notwithstanding the Respondent itself could and did conduct tests which tend to render substantially academic Colarusso's failure to deliver a copy of the results to Respondents, I do not believe that these factors demonstrate that Colarusso's refusal to deliver the copy was a mere pretext, as the General Counsel argues. Nor am I persuaded that Shank's testimony in May 1986 before the Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation Board, that the Colarusso's failure to give a report was not the only element causing the discharge, demonstrates the pretextual nature of the failure to give the report (Tr. 519). Any argument that the failure to surrender the report created a pretext to mask an unlawful discharge far overshoots the mark.

There was no question that Respondent was seriously concerned, commencing with its knowledge from Guffrovich's 13 March interview of Colarusso, about the apparent presence of arsenic dust in the administrative offices. It was so concerned that Division Industrial Relations Director Herron forthwith caused Richardson to be sent to the Pittson plant to check on the quality of the air in the medical office. There is also no question, as the General Counsel pointed out, that Respondent would have to be fearful of its possible liability to the 1000 plant employees were it to disregard a report of arsenic in the dust in the ventilation system in that administrative offices Thus, the failure of its own nurse, part of the health team, to promptly supply it with a copy of the report which she knew showed arsenic and which, even in her own estimation, wasimportant to turn over to Respondent (especially in view of the illness of Debbie Savoia), shows that, whatever its weight, it cannot be regrded as a mere pretext excuse on which to pin an unlawful discharge.

[26] I regard as inexplicable and bordering on the unintelligible Colarusso's testimony that she believed that Shanks did not want to hear about the arsenic in the dust at the same time that he was demanding a copy of the Kirby Health Center report (Tr. 623–625).

V. SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

The rules concerning the burden of proof of alleged unlawful conduct, including the status (as found above) of the prima facie case, is found in Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 959 (1982), as favorably adopted by the Supreme Court in NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393, 401–403 (1983). As the court of appeals recently restated the rules in NLRB v. Dorothy Shamrock Coal Co., 833 F.2d 1263, 1266 (7th Cir. 1987), enfd. 279 NLRB No. 175 (1986) (not reported in Board volumes).

> The General Counsel carries the burden of proving the elements of a section 8 unfair labor practice . . . . Thus, the General Counsel must establish that the discharge or other adverse labor practice was "based in whole or in part on antiunion animus—or . . . that the employee's protected conduct formed a substantial or motivating factor in the [employer's] adverse action. . . . The employer, however, may avoid liability by showing that his actions would have been the same "regardless" of his forbidden motive.

It seems to me that in deciding the ultimate motive for Respondent's actions (both deprivation of the 1 April 6-percent wage increase and the 20 March–8 April suspension—discharge), the pivotal evidence in determining the strength of the General Counsel's overall proof, as opposed to the existence of a mere prima facie case, is certain Shank and Colarusso testimony. I have credited Colarusso who testified that at the 18 March disciplinary meeting, Shank told ner, inter alia, that she could expect further discipline. I have discredited Shank's testimony that he did not mention the possibility of further discipline because, as of March 18, he wanted the matter of discipline "put to bed" by the imposition of only loss of the 6-percent increase; that it was occurrences at the 18 March meeting that led to the further discipline of suspension and discharge.

He testified that, as a result of the 18 March meeting he decided to investigate (1) why Colarusso contacted OSHA; (2) why she submitted the dust samples to Kirby Health Center; and (3) the question of cleaning of ducts (Tr. 304–305).

Yet Shank already knew (from the Guffrovich-Nardone 13 March report) that Colarusso, in fact, had submitted samples to Kirby Health Center and contacted OSHA. If his 18 March desire was truly to put the matter to rest—and if he did not already know why she had contacted OSHA—why did he testify that he wished to determine the further question of why she contacted OSHA and submitted samples to Kirby Health Center. To further examine her motives is to exacerbate the problem. To raise with her the question why, mentioning Respondent's in-house expertise, is to open the way for further confrontation and not to put the matter to rest.

Hence, the significance of credibility resolution that, on 18 March Shank told her that "further action" might be taken against her (Tr. 114). I discredit his denial (that he did not say that Colarusso could expect further discipline) and I discredit his testimony concerning his desire, as of 18 March, to put the matter of discipline "to bed."

I conclude that, whether the impetus came from Shank's 13–17 March phone calls to divisional superiors or otherwise, Respondent (Shank included) had decided by 18 March to discharge Colarusso and was looking for further grounds.

If Shank's testimony—that Colarusso's pre-18 March conduct was found to be insufficient for discharge, is credited then the matters Shank later unearthed, the basis of the discharge according to Shank's testimony at the hearing, are insufficient to support the subsequent discharge: the Garcia-Pons lie, the McHale confrontation, and the spurious Richardson reports. They are insufficient because, in discharging Colarusso, none of these elements appear in Shank's own all-inclusive, carefully crafted 8 April discharge letter (G.C. Exh. 6). Respondent had 18 days (20 March–8 April) to construct the written reasons for discharge in its 8 April letter and failed to mention any of these "lies." And 2 months later, in Shank's unemployment compensation testimony, the defamatory Richardson-reported lies were still not mentioned.

The Colarusso refusal to hand over the Kirby report, on the surface, is patently insubordinate. It cannot be rationalized as in any way a device protective of concerted activities. The refusal was based only on the personal (and irrelevant) ground of Colarusso's fear that Shank would use it to further coerce her into early retirement—a position that Shank, at all times, was privileged to pursue. On the other hand, in determining the position of that element in the lawfulness of the discharge, it is not Colarusso's insubordinate attitude but Respondent's perception of that attitude that is controlling.

Shank long (since 14 March) knew of, and did not act on, Colarusso's insubordinate refusal to surrender a copy to Guffrovich. Ensuing phone calls to divisional and plant superiors resulted only in the 18 March decision to withhold the 6-percent wage increase. Thus the insubordinate refusal to surrender a copy of the report, according to Respondent's decision, would result only in loss of the pay raise. It was only thereafter (19 March et seq.), in conjunction with alleged further evidence of Colarusso "lies," that Shank demanded—and was himself refused—a copy of the report. But he knew of the 220 microgram section of the report and, with Respondent's in-house expertise, could duplicate the Kirby Hospital analysis. Indeed, because Richardson's actual subsequent testing showed no dangerous level of arsenic or other noxious elements, it tends to make Shank's insistence or receiving a copy of the Kirby report—to the point of discharging Colarusso on refusal—to be a suspicious effort.

I have concluded that, as evidenced by Herron's hurried dispatch of Richardson (on or about 14 March) to do further air sampling in the Pittson administrative offices (on 18 March), Shank's divisional superiors were seriously concerned by the news which Guffrovich and Nardone reported to Shank on 13 March. Such a conclusion, however, is entirely consistent with the parallel conclusion that Respondent unlawfully terminated Colarusso. For (and this is central to the conclusions in this case), Respondent's hierarchy's immediate, genuine concern, with the health implications of Shank's report to them around 13 or 14 March, of arsenic-laden dust in the administrative office's ventillation system, is in no way incompatible with my finding that, as Shank testified, Respondent would not look favorably on an employee (a fortiori, a person associated with management—a member of Respondent's "safety team," (Tr. 534) "blowing the whistle" by informing OSHA (Tr. 515). Colarusso's recourse to Kirby Health Center and OSHA was like "calling the cops" a little bit of treason (Tr. 534).

Thus, while the record does not show, for instance what, if any, instructions Herron gave Richardson (after Herron's being briefed of Colarusso's OSHA contact and her submitting samples to Kirby Health Center) other than to do further air sampling, yet Richardson's false testimony,[27] designed to be, or knowing the effect of being, so destructive of Colarusso's credibility, provides support for the conclusion that by the time of Richardson's 18 March conversations with Colarusso (before, not after, Shank had Guffrovich call her into Shank's office, later on 18 March), Colarusso's goose was cooked.

How else to explain Richardson's testimony: that Colarusso told him, a total stranger, not to trust Shank or Guffrovich concerning arsenic exposure because neither was concerned with the health and welfare of the plant employees (Tr. 345). Because, as above noted, Richardson reported the allegedly whispered (morning of 18 March) Colarusso admission[28] (of Michalene Lyons and Colarusso secretly cleaning the vents) to Guffrovich and Shank (Tr. 341–349; 405–406), it is incredible that he apparently failed to report Colarusso's other, simultaneous hostile and defamatory (morning of 18 March) statement to Shank and Guffrovich: that neither was to be trusted because of lack of concern for the health of plant employees. None of Shank's nor Guffrovich's testimony alludes to such corrosive statements and, as might be expected, the discharge letter is silent as to such statements.

In short, I conclude that there is no mention of these malignant Colarusso statements (made to Richardson) in Respondent's defense—in the discharge letter or in Shank's testimony before the Unemployment Compensation Commission because Colarusso never made them. Richardson's false testimony describing them demonstrates, it seems to me, such separate, overwheening animus as to independently support the conclusion that, at a divisional level, Respondent was out to "get" Colarusso. Contacting OSHA was "treasonous."

If, however, there is a doubt that Shank was going to discharge her before the 18 March meeting, there could be no doubt of his resolve following the 19 March meeting. There, facing Shank and Guffrovich, Colarusso took the appallingly self-righteous, if legal, position that she had the "right" not only to contact OSHA, but to accompany the OSHA investigator to the place of contamination (Tr. 120). Little is left to the imagination how such statement sat with Shank and Guffrovich who viewed her original OSHA contact as "treason" to Respondent. When, on 19 March, she then reaffirmed her "right" to use the OSHA weapon, to a supervisor with Shank's predisposition, Colarusso was "out" even if a prior decision to fire her had not been made.[29]

[27] His overall credibility indeed his veracity, was undermined by the credited and, on this record, wholly ingenuous testimony of Michalene Lyons, Respondent's own witness—still in Respondent's employ.

[28] Michalene Lyons specifically denied cleaning the vents, with or without Colarusso's help.

Even if Colarusso's failure to hand over a copy of the report was not a pretext, yet, considering the strength of the prima facie case, including the degree of animus, and the falseness or late invention of many of Respondent's ("lies") reasons for the discharge, I am not convinced, under the Wright Line test, that such insubordination would have caused the suspension and discharge apart from Colarusso's conduct protected by the statute. I conclude that the denial of the 18 March wage increase, the 20 March suspension, and the 8 April discharge violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, as alleged. See Delta Gas, 282 NLRB 1315 (1987) (Chairman Dotson dissenting).

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
2. Glass, Pottery, Plastics and Allied Workers International Union, Local 243 is, and has been at all material times, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent, by refusing to grant its employee, Louise Colarusso, a pay raise on or about 1 April 1986, by suspending her on 20 March and by discharging her on 8 April, all because she engaged in protected concerted activities, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, thereby unlawfully interfering with, restraining, and coercing employees in activities protected by Section 7 of the Act.
4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

The Remedy

Having found that Respondent is engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and that it take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Respondent has taken the position that it discharged Colarusso, inter alia, for three sets of lies. In rejecting that defense, I have nevertheless agreed with Respondent that Colarusso lied in falsely accusing Guffrovich and McHale of cleaning the vents. I have determined, however, only that that lie was not sufficient to discharge her. Put another way, while I have concluded that Respondent discharged Colarusso unlawfully, I have not suggested that Colarusso did not lie.

The transcript record, however, shows other instances of Colarusso's untruthfulness. I regard her testimony concerning whether Shank asked her for a copy of the Kirby Health Center report to be evasive to the point of untruthfulness (compare: Tr. 123 to Tr. 623–625). I have also concluded that, in the face of Slavoski's repeated denials, Colarusso lied in testifying that Slavoski told her that machine shop employees were complaining of tiredness, burning eyes, or headaches due to air quality (compare: Tr. 40–41 to Tr. 50). The transcript shows that, for a statutorily irrelevant reason, Colarusso facilely lied to Guffrovich regarding the destruction and unavailability of the Kirby Health Center report.

This record of Colarusso's untruthfulness, however, pales in comparison to her obdurate insistence, at the hearing, on her having kept the back portion of her diary on a daily basis. Neither continued examination, admonitions, exhortations, nor warnings could sway her from her untruthfulness.

Colarusso, the head nurse, was part of Respondent's Pittson health team—a position of considerable responsibility and consequence considering the extraordinary toxins with which the manufacturing process regularly deals. As a professional employee dealing with the health of 1000 employees, and given Colarusso's propensity for untruthfulness (granting her great personal, and reasonable, concern based on Savoia's toxic level, particularly for her own health) I cannot and do not recommend to the Board that she be reinstated. To this extent, Respondent is rid of Colarusso. It is, however, neither profiting from its unfair labor practices nor put in the happily anomalous position of having tried and failed to terminate her, inter alia, for untruthfulness and yet being not compelled to reinstate her for the same reason.

The "lies" which I have found insufficient to support Respondent's defense were either not lies or not actually the motivating factor in the discharge. The examples of untruthfulness on which I recommend a remedy, other than Colarusso's reinstatement, are not those on which Respondent relied for its unlawful actions. There are different statutory ends to be served, on one hand, in my recommending an order against a repetition of Respondent's unlawful conduct concerning its other employees and, on the other hand, in this peculiar case, remedying that conduct, inter alia, by not returning to employment, in a professionally delicate and fiduciary position, an employee who has demonstrated certain conduct not consistent with Respondent's and Respondent's employees' unlawful interests.[30]

[29] Thus, where Shank repeatedly testified that it was Colarusso's interviews of 18–20 March caused him to seek further discipline, it was not the newly revealed "lies," but her insistence on OSHA rights that caused Shank's reevaluation. Guffrovich already had been "stunned" by the OSHA contact.

[30] The precedents relating to cases involving false testimony where the recommendation was against reinstatement with backpay (following unlawful discharge), of course, are fact-specific. There is no question, as I read the cases, that the Board rule appears to be that forfeiture of the reinstatement-backpay remedy will be entertained, not merely where the false testimony is deliberate and willful, but only where it amounts to "a malicious abuse of the Board's processes." Service Garage, 256 NLRB 931 (1981); Iowa Beef Packers, 144 NLRB 615, 622 (1963). The courts of appeals do not accept that standard and appear to find that repeated lying "severely impede[s] the fact-finding process" and does "not effectuate the

Continued

Regarding affirmative relief to Colarusso, I recommend to the Board that the 1 April pay raise be reinstituted and that Colarusso be made whole for any loss of earnings that she may have suffered by reason of this deprivation and her being unlawfully suspended and discharged on 8 April 1986, by paying to her a sum of money equal to that which she should have received from her suspension on 20 March to the date of her termination on 8 April 1986. Interest is to be computed in accordance with New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).[31]

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[32]

ORDER

The Respondent, Owens Illinois, Inc., Pittston, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging or suspending any employee, or depriving any employee of a pay raise, or otherwise disciplining any employee because the employee or other employees engage in concerted activities protected by Section 7 of the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Make whole Louise M. Colarusso by immediately paying to her, with interest, the amounts of wages or earnings of which Respondent deprived her commencing with her suspension on or about 20 March 1986, until her discharge of 8 April 1986 as set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(b) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its Pittston, Pennsylvania place of business, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[33] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the complaint, in all other respects, shall be dismissed.

---

policies of the Act," NLRB v. Magnusen, 523 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1975), denying enf. North Star Refrigerator Co., 207 NLRB 500, 504 (1973); Iowa Beef Packers v. NLRB, 331 F.2d 176, 184–185 (8th Cir. 1964), enfg. 144 NLRB 615 (1963). As I have tried to point out, however, here the distinguishing factors are that the employee is a professional and occupies a delicate position in the health field where employer and employee confidence are concerned, cf. NLRB v. Western Clinical Laboratory, 571 F.2d 457 (9th Cir. 1978); and that the primary inquiry should be whether, under the circumstances "reinstatement would create an undesirable employment situation" and thereby "frustrate the purposes of the NLRA." NLRB v. Jacob E. Decker & Sons, 636 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1981).

[31] In accordance with our decision in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987), interest on and after January 1, 1987, shall be computed at the "short-term Federal rate" for the underpayment of taxes as set out in the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621. Interest on amounts accrued prior to January 1, 1987 (the effective date of the 1986 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 6621), shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[32] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[33] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Pomeroy Co. and Service Employees International Union, Local 32B–32J, AFL–CIO. Case AO–263

September 22, 1988

ADVISORY OPINION

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN, CRACRAFT, AND HIGGINS

Pursuant to Sections 102.98 and 102.99 of the National Labor Relations Board's Rules and Regulations, on July 13, 1988, the Pomeroy Company (the Petitioner) filed a petition for an advisory opinion as to whether the Board would assert jurisdiction over it based on the Board's current jurisdictional standards.

In pertinent part, the petition alleges as follows:

1. The Petitioner is a limited partnership that owns and operates residential apartment buildings located at 520, 522, 524, 526, and 530 West 123d Street, as well as other residential apartment buildings in New York, New York.

2. A representation proceeding (Case No. SE–56694) is currently pending before the New York State Labor Relations Board (the SLRB) in which the Service Employees International Union, Local 32B–32J, AFL–CIO (the Union) is seeking to be certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of the Petitioner's service and maintenance employees at its 520, 522, 524, 526, and 530 West 123d Street locations.

3. During the preceding year, which period is representative of its operations generally, the Petitioner had gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchased goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from sources located outside the State of New York.

4. The Union has indicated to the Petitioner that it lacks sufficient information to admit or deny the aforesaid commerce data, and the SLRB has to date taken no action with respect to the representation petition pending before it.

5. There is no representation or unfair labor practice proceeding involving the same dispute currently pending before the Board.

Although all parties were served with a copy of the petition for advisory opinion, none has filed a response thereto as permitted by Section 102.101 of the Board's Rules and Regulations.

On the basis of the foregoing, the Board is of the opinion that it would assert jurisdiction over the Petitioner. The Board has established a $500,000 discretionary standard for asserting jurisdiction over residential apartments.[1] As the Petitioner alleges that its gross annual revenues exceed that amount, assuming the Petitioner is a single employer with respect to its several apartment buildings, it would satisfy the Board's discretionary standard.[2] Further, as the Petitioner's alleged annual out-of-state purchases are more than de minimis, it would also satisfy the Board's statutory standard for asserting jurisdiction.

Accordingly, the parties are advised that, based on the aforesaid allegations and assumptions, the Board would assert jurisdiction over the Petitioner.

[1] See Parkview Gardens, 166 NLRB 697 (1967).

[2] The Board has traditionally aggregated the gross revenues derived from all apartment buildings operated by an employer in determining whether to assert jurisdiction in a labor dispute arising at any one of them. See, e.g., R & C Management Co., 264 NLRB 873 (1982); Marlake Associates, 231 NLRB 335 (1977).

Waste Systems Corp. and United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO, CIC. Cases 18–CA–10233 and 18–CA–10293

September 23, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On May 25, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Clifford H. Anderson issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed a cross-exception and a supporting and reply brief. The Charging Party filed a letter in support of the General Counsel's position.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's ruling, findings,[1] conclusions as modified and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

The judge found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by refusing to execute an agreement reached in September 1987, and by instituting unilateral changes in November 1987. We adopt only the finding of the violation for refusing to execute the agreement.

The judge found that the Respondent and the Union reached agreement on a new contract on September 9, 1987, which was recapitulated in a subsequent phone conversation to clarify and correct the draft agreement the Respondent had prepared following the final bargaining session. This agreement, with the corrections agreed to by the Respondent, was ratified by the Respondent's employees on September 14, 1987. The Respondent has refused to sign or implement the agreement.

The statutory obligation to bargain in good faith established in Section 8(a)(5) of the Act includes the obligation to reduce to writing and sign any agreement reached during the course of collective bargaining. H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U.S. 514 (1941). Therefore, we agree with the judge that the Respondent's refusal to sign and abide by the agreement violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

The judge also concluded that workplace regulations instituted by the Respondent in November 1987 were unlawful unilateral actions.[3] The changes, however, according to the testimony of the union representative, were permitted under the management-rights of the contract. We believe, given the union agent's admission, that the judge's unilateral changes finding is inconsistent with his finding that there was a contract between the parties. Under that contract, which we find the Respondent must execute and abide by, the Respondent was privileged to make the work rule changes. Accordingly, we dismiss the complaint allegation that the Respondent violated the Act by changing the loitering and lunchtime credit work rules.

AMENDED CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Delete Conclusion of Law 4 and renumber the subsequent paragraph.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Waste Systems Corp., Albert Lea, Minnesota, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Delete paragraphs 1(b), 2(c), and 2(d) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs.

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

[1] The Respondent's exceptions implicitly challenge the judge's crediting of uncontradicted testimony as a basis for his findings. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

The General Counsel excepts to the judge's failure to find an additional 8(a)(5) violation based on the Respondent's attempt to withdraw its final offer to the Union. We agree with the judge that the contract was in effect at the time of the attempted withdrawal. As the remedy for the Respondent's unlawful refusal to execute the contract effectively encompasses a remedy for the additional violation sought, we find it unnecessary to pass on the General Counsel's cross-exception.

[2] We amend the judge's remedy to provide that the Respondent shall pay backpay as prescribed in Ogle Protection Service, 183 NLRB 682 (1970), enfd. 444 F.2d 502 (6th Cir. 1971).

[3] The judge based this conclusion on equitable grounds, denying the Respondent the opportunity to contest the existence of the contract and at the same time attempt to take advantage of the contract's management-rights clause.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Accordingly, we give you the following assurances.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to acknowledge and sign a collective-bargaining agreement reached with United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO, CLC, the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the following unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed at or out of our facilities in Albert Lea, Austin, Blue Earth and Fairmont, Minnesota and Lake Mills, Iowa; excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL sign the contract reached with the Union in September 1987 and honor that contract through its life.

WE WILL make employees whole for any and all losses they have suffered because of our failure to acknowledge, sign, and honor our contract with the Union, and WE WILL pay interest on those losses.

WASTE SYSTEMS CORP.

James L. Fox, Esq., for the General Counsel.
David R. Hols, Esq. (Felhaber, Larson, Fenlon & Vogt, P.A.), of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the Respondent.
John G. Engberg, Esq. (Peterson, Engberg & Peterson), of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

CLIFFORD H. ANDERSON, Administrative Law Judge. I heard these consolidated cases in trial on January 26, 1988, in Minneapolis, Minnesota. The matter arose as follows. The United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO, CLC (the Charging Party) filed a charge docketed as Case 18–CA–10233 on September 24, 1987. Following an investigation of the charge, the Regional Director for Region 18 issued a complaint and notice of hearing in Case 18–CA–10233 on November 6, 1987. The Charging Party filed Case 18–CA–10293 on November 23, 1987. Following an investigation, the Regional Director for Region 18 issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated and amended complaint, and notice of hearing on December 31, 1987, consolidating the two cases for hearing.

The consolidated amended complaint alleges and the answer denies that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (Act) by failing and refusing to execute a written contract embodying an agreement reached with the Charging Party on September 17, 1987. The complaint further alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by making certain changes in terms and conditions of employment of represented employees without affording the Charging Party an opportunity to meet and bargain concerning the changes and, finally, alleges that in November 1987 Respondent wrongfully withdrew its contract proposals during negotiations with the Charging Party because the Charging Party had filed an unfair labor practice with the National Labor Relations Board (Board), and notwithstanding the fact that the parties had reached previous agreement with respect to those proposals, thereby violating Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the Act.

All parties were given full opportunity to participate at the hearing, to introduce relevant evidence, to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to file posthearing briefs.

On the entire record, including briefs from the General Counsel, Respondent, and the Charging Party, and my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The consolidated amend complaint alleges and the answer admits that at all times material, Respondent has been an Iowa corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Albert Lea, Minnesota, with additional facilities located in Lake Mills, Iowa, and Austin, Fairmont, and Blue Earth, Minnesota, where it has been engaged in the business of transporting, storing, and disposing of solid waste and waste recycling. During the calendar year ending December 31, 1987, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, sold and shipped from its facilities located within Minnesota products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Minnesota. Further, during the same period, in the course of its business operations, Respondent purchased and received at its facilities located within Minnesota products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Minnesota. The pleadings establish, and I find, that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Charging Party is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Evidence Concerning Collective-Bargaining Negotiations

1. Background

At relevant times Respondent's president has been Ron Roth, whose offices are located in St. Paul, Minnesota.

During the same period Respondent's vice president and general manager was David Bergan. At relevant times, Respondent's counsel assisting during the course of negotiations was David R. Hols of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Representing the Charging Party during the relevant events was Paul Hanson of Albert Lea, Minnesota, for many years the staff representative of the Charging Party.

On September 24, 1986, the Charging Party was certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the following unit (the unit):

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed at or out of Respondent's facilities in Albert Lea, Austin, Blue Earth and Fairmont, Minnesota and Lake Mills, Iowa; excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The pleadings establish and I find that the unit is appropriate for purposes of collective-bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act. The pleadings further establish and I find that at all times since September 24, 1986, the Charging Party, by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act, has been, and is now, the exclusive representative of unit employees for purposes of collective bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment.

2. The bargaining[1]

Following the Board's certifiction of the Charging Party as representative of unit employees, Respondent and the Charging Party commenced bargaining. Face-to-face bargaining commenced in December 1986 and ended on September 9, 1987, totaling approximately 16 meetings. Paul Hanson of the Charging Party was the spokesman for the Union's negotiating team, assisted by two employees. Ron Roth was the spokesman for Respondent's negotiating team, assisted by David Bergan and, on one occasion, by William Paul.

Hanson testified that he was made aware that Respondent's negotiating committee was being advised by Counsel Hols. Hanson testified, however, that Hols did not physically participate in the negotiations nor at any time did Roth ever suggest that any agreements in negotiations were subject to the approval of Hols. Hanson recalled that Roth mentioned in later negotiation sessions that Hols had made suggestions for changes in language already agreed to, but at no time did Roth advise that the suggestions were preconditions to a final agreement.[2]

At the negotiation session on July 23, 1987, Respondent submitted a written proposal to the Charging Party, which included proposed language on contract articles 5.04 and 8.14(D). At a later bargaining session on August 5, 1987, Roth proposed certain modifications in article 5.04 and Hanson agreed to those modifications if certain changes could be made in section 8.14(d). Agreement was reached. Hanson presented a summary of the agreement reached as to article V to Roth at the next bargaining session on August 20, 1987. At that session Roth reviewed the doucment and made a comment in Hanson's recollection, "I may have agreed to that too soon." Roth proposed additional language changes that were further discussed at the next bargaining session on September 2, 1987. Further agreement was reached on additional modifications to those clauses. Hanson testified that he told Roth at this bargaining session that he would rewrite article V in light of the agreed-upon changes. At the bargaining session on September 9, 1987, Hanson submitted to Roth a draft, submitted into evidence as General Counsel's Exhibit 8, which was a written form of the agreed-upon article V language. Hanson testified without contradiction that Roth "received it and agreed with it." Hanson recalled Roth's specific term of approval was "Okay."

Several matters of substance separated the parties at the commencement of the September 9 bargaining session, including issues of union shop and the wage rate for the classification rear loader leadman. At the conclusion of the bargaining session, agreement had been reached with respect to all matters. Hanson raised with Roth the proper form for signature lines on the signature page of the written contract and provided Roth with the sample form. Hanson testified that the meeting ended with everyone in agreement.

> Mr. Roth said that if the committee recommended [the contract as agreed to], he would agree to what we wanted and include the checkoff and union shop language, and the committee said that they would recommend the contract in its entirety to the rank and file. We all said, thank you, we had good meetings, we shook hands and left. The Company, Mr. Roth was going to compile drafts that would include all of the changes we had discussed on the

[1] The great bulk of the testimony respecting bargaining was supplied by Paul Hanson, called as a witness by the General Counsel. David Bergan, appearing on behalf of Respondent, testified only regarding a specific document. Bergan testified to the submission of a document at the commencement of a negotiation session, as discussed in detail infra, which Hanson did not recall. Each witness gave every appearance of honesty and directness and presented a straightforward and convincing demeanor. I credit each witness concerning the matters testified to. With respect to the timing of the submission of the document testified to by Bergan, I credit his testimony and find, consistent with Hanson's testimony, that Hanson simply did not recall the event in question. The testimony of these individuals, coupled with the unchallenged documentary evidence, is the basis of the following factual recital.

[2] Hanson testified as follows under cross-examination by counsel for Respondent:

Q. Okay. Mr. Roth told you at the start of negotiations that he himself was a layman, not a professional negotiator, is that right?

A. As I recall it, Mr. Roth had told me that he had negotiated contracts and that he was the chief spokesman for this negotiations.

Q. Did Mr. Roth tell you from time to time he was getting legal review between meetings of what was done in the bargaining?

A. As I recall, at the beginning, he told me something like, "Paul, you know that I am dealing with Mr. Hols as an attorney but I will be handling these negotiations."

Q. Well, in point of fact, Mr. Roth did from time to time tell you across the table that something had to be changed because he had gotten a legal opinion, is that correct?

A. Yes, he came back and said that he talked to [Counsel Hols] on a couple of occasions and says he advised me to try to get these changes.

September 9 meeting, get three copies to the Union, and we said when we saw those, if it was all in order we would set a ratification meeting. I think we talked about having a ratification meeting as early as Monday, which would be the 14th [of September 1987]. I think we weren't sure at that time and Mr. Roth asked me to send him a letter on it.

On September 10, 1987, Hanson sent Roth a letter including a sample signature page and asking Roth to make arrangements so that certain employees working the night shift could attend the "scheduled contract ratification meeting on Monday, September 14, at 6:30 p.m." Hanson sent Roth a second letter on the same day with the following text:

> This letter will confirm our agreements reached yesterday afternoon resulting in a complete contract proposal.
>
> Company will make all necessary changes and provide three (3) complete copies to the Union for review.
>
> If all is in order the Union plans to have a membership meeting at 6:30 p.m., Monday, September 14 at the Union center in Albert Lea to present the final proposal for ratification.
>
> The Union committee and myself have agreed to support and recommend the final proposal as agreed upon in yesterday's meeting for acceptance.
>
> I wish to thank you personally for the understanding and professional manner in which you addressed the concerns of your union employees during the negotiations.

Respondent prepared three copies of the draft agreement, which, by means of the employee-members of the negotiating committee, were transmitted to Hanson who received the copies on September 14. Hanson testified that on reviewing the draft agreement, he discovered that articles 5.04 and 8.05 did not include certain language proposed by Respondent and agreed to by the Union. Hanson then called Roth at his workplace and had a telephone conversation with him. Hanson testified that he told Roth that he had reviewed the draft contract and had some questions. Initially the conversation returned to contract language respecting overtime wage rates, and some questions Roth had on a variation between overtime and weekend wage rates. Roth asserted that the draft reflected their agreement and Hanson accepted this characterization. The conversation then turned to article 5 which Hanson contended reflected certain of the changes agreed to, but did not include certain qualifying languages and certain language addressing a 5-day working trial. Hanson continued in his testimony regarding Roth's response:

> He seemed to review his notes on that end of the phone, looked at it and understood what I said. He said, the secretary must have missed that, left it out. And he said, put in the page as we agreed to.
>
> I then said that Section 8.05 is the same way, that was the section that reads in the draft that there shall be no split shift. I said, you and [sic] requested and agreed to adding the words "unless mutually agreed to by the parties." I said, that is an omission. He said that the secretary must have missed that too. Put it in.
>
> I said that we were going to have a ratification meeting that afternoon at 6:30 and that I would present the contract as we had just agreed to it.

Hanson testified that there were no new proposals made during the course of the telephone conversation and that at its end he was aware of no areas of disagreement between the parties.

Later that day at the ratification meeting, employees voted to accept the agreement. Hanson attempted to report this to Roth but was unable to reach him. On September 16, 1987, Hanson mailed Roth a letter with the following text:

> As I have not been able to reach you by telephone, I will advise you by this letter that final Company proposal of the Labor Agreement reached on our meeting on Wednesday, September 9, 1987, was ratified at a meeting of Waste Systems' employees on Monday, September 14, 1987. We, therefore, consider your final proposal acceptable and in force effective as of September 1, 1987.
>
> Please call upon me at your earliest convenience so that we can make the necessary arrangements to sign the completed document.

On September 17, 1987, the union committee signed the collective-bargaining agreement draft attaching the earlier prepared recapitulation of article 5 and further attaching a cover letter with the following handwritten cover sheet signed by Hanson to Roth:

> This agreement was presented and accepted as changed by including "new" 5.04 section (attached).
>
> And by adding the words "unless agreed to by the parties" to Section 8.05 "THERE SHALL BE NO SPLIT SHIFTS" as per our telephone conversation on Monday, September 14, 1987.
>
> I and the committee have signed to indicate our approval.
>
> I will expect to hear from you early next week.

Later that day, Roth and Hanson spoke by telephone. Roth informed Hanson that Bergan had received "something from the National Labor Relations Board, and he knew something was going on with employees, but he didn't know what."[3] Hanson asked Roth "what he wanted to do about signing the contract." Roth told Hanson he would "get them to Mr. Bergan and Mr. Bergan will get them to me. I'll see [Bergan] by Monday. I'll pass [the contract] on to Mr. Hols to review and will get them signed."

Following several attempts to contact Roth by telephone, Hanson reached him on October 8, 1987. Roth informed Hanson he was going to meet with Hols the following Friday or Monday and that "he would get back to me after that meeting." Hanson reached Roth again by telephone on October 14, 1987. Roth informed Hanson that he was just leaving the office and that he would see Hols the following day and get back to him. Roth and Hanson had no subsequent communication regarding the contract sent by Hanson to Roth. Hanson testified that neither Roth nor any other agent of Respondent at any time informed him or to his knowledge any other agent of the Union that the document transmitted by the Union to Respondent did not completely reflect the agreement reached during bargaining.

[3] A decertification petition had been filed with the Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board. It was subsequently dismissed for being out of time.

On September 24, 1987, the initial charge in this matter was filed, and on November 6, 1987, the original complaint issued. On November 6, 1987, Roth sent Hanson a letter with the following text: "Waste Systems' previous contract offer to USW No. 3539 is hereby withdrawn." There have been no subsequent negotiation sessions or other communication between the parties as of the date of the hearing.

3. Evidence concerning the alleged unilateral changes

Apparently, since January 1, 1985, a date preceding the date of certification of the Charging Party, Respondent has maintained an employee policy handbook that contains the following language under the heading Payperiod and Timecards:

> One-half hour will be deducted each day to cover time for lunch for hourly paid employees who are not able to punch in and out, such as drivers and mechanics working away from the shop. NO EXCEPTIONS!! All other hourly paid employees working at the shop area are required to punch in and out.
>
> Falsification of timecard information will be grounds for immediate dismissal. Loitering by the timeclock while still punched in will be viewed similarly. Acts such as these are dishonest and will not be tolerated.

David Bergan testified that sometime in early or midsummer 1987 Respondent posted a memo that "because there were a lot of people writing 'no lunch' on their timecards, that if that was to be allowed for payroll purposes that it be approved by someone in supervisory capacity." There is no dispute that unit employees took advantage of this policy and regularly obtained supervisory approval to receive pay without deduction for lunch under appropriate circumstances. Bergan testified concerning Respondent's change of this practice in November 1987:

> Well, the situation of not getting approval on the timecards was getting out of hand. I was getting a lot of questions on Monday from the personnel department about should I or should I not pay this person for the time indicated as a "no lunch" and there was no initials by it authorizing it. So, we felt the situation was getting out of hand, at the staff meeting, the following staff meeting, we decided that we were going to go back to what the employee handbook said on a "no exception" basis to eliminate the problem.

Respondent posted an intercompany notice to employees on or about November 18, 1987, with the following text:

> As of Novemeber 30, 1987, all employees will be REQUIRED to take their one-half hour lunch period. This time will be deducted from the timecards without exception. Employees who work in or around the shop will continue to punch out for lunch as they presently do.

There was no dispute that the Union was never notified of this change in practice that constituted, in effect, a restoration of the personnel manual rule.

David Bergan testified that in early November he had occasion to observe employees loitering in the work areas after punching out their time cards. He noticed in particular one driver who would spend an excessive amount of time in the shop after his work had been completed and he had punched out. Noticing this, Bergan had a notice to be posted, which stated in part:

> It has been brought to my attention that there is a need to clarify three important rules.
>
> . . . .
>
> Loitering in the shop areas prior to punching in and after punching out is not allowed. Depart promptly from the shop areas after punching out. Engaging in casual conversations with other employees while still clocked in is disruption to them and interferes with their ability to concentrate on their work. Please respect your fellow employees in this regard.
>
> This notice would not have to be posted if these rules were not being abused.
>
> Failure to heed the items listed above will result in disciplinary action.

There is no disputes that the Union was neither notified of nor provided an opportunity to bargain concerning the content of the notice. As of the time of the hearing no disciplinary action had been initiated with respect to either notice.

The various contract proposals that are the subject of the dispute regarding the existence of a binding agreement, as described above, all contain a management-rights paragraph, that, inter alia, provides Respondent the right to establish reasonable rules covering employee conduct. All the collective-bargaining proposals also contain grievance and binding arbitration language. Under examination by counsel for Respondent, Hanson conceded that the management-rights language contained in the proposals would, in his view, allow Respondent to institute the types of rule changes described in the notices quoted above.

4. Analysis

a. Allegation that Respondent is bound to sign the collective-bargaining agreement

The parties are not at essential disagreement concerning the case law applicable to the issue in dispute. Thus, the Supreme Court long ago approved the doctrine that the statutory obligation to bargain in good faith established in Section 8(a)(5) of the Act includes the obligation to reduce to writing and sign any agreement reached during the course of collective-bargaining negotiations. H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U.S. 514 (1941). The General Counsel makes the following additional argument on brief:

> Where a portion of the agreement is reduced to writing, additional terms may still be found based on oral agreements not included in the written agreement. Fashion Furniture Manufacturing, Inc., 279 NLRB No. 95 (April 30, 1986), ALJ slip op. at 1. The ultimate determination of whether agreement has been reached is a question of fact to be decided on the basis of an evaluation of whether the parties have engaged in conduct manifesting an intention to be bound. Capitol-Husting Co., 671 F.2d at 243; Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel, 202 NLRB at 888.

Respondent points out that the Board has further held, however, that mere surmising concerning portions of an agreement does not establish sufficient meeting of minds to obligate any party to sign such an agreement. Mercedes-Benz of North America, 258 NLRB 803 (1981). The issue is essentially one of fact.

Turning to the facts of the case, Hanson's uncontradicted testimony regarding the conclusion of the September 9, 1987 bargaining session supports a finding, which I make, that the parties believed they had reached complete agreement on a collective-bargaining agreement. In this regard I reject Respondent's argument that the parties understood that any agreement Roth undertook at the bargaining table was subject to the subsequent approval by Respondent's counsel.

It is true, however, that not all the agreement had been reduced to a single writing as of September 9. Respondent argues on brief:

> The meeting ended on a note that these tentative agreements were to be written up and submitted for review. This is clearly not a meeting of the minds on a contract. In point of fact, when the written language was submitted, it was not agreed upon. The areas of disagreement were significant and substantive.

The difference between the Union's position and Respondent's position, insofar as it was manifested in the draft sent to the Union after the September 9 negotiation session, was the subject of the important telephone call between Hanson and Roth on September 14. Respondent argues on brief that any agreement manifested in that conversation was simply an agreement to review and study the Union's proposed changes and that Roth, engaged in other business at his office during the conversation, could not reasonably be held to have approved in any final sense the statements of Hanson. I reject this argument on the facts. Hanson, who was the sole person to testify regarding the conversation, and who has been credited elsewhere, persuasively testified that he did not propose new language to Roth, but merely indicated that some sort of typographical omission had occurred and that previously written out protions of the contract had not been included in the complete final draft. Further, Hanson attributes to Roth a complete approval of the suggestions Hanson had proposed. On this credited testimony, I reject Respondent's contention that there was some type of ambiguity that prevented a meeting of the minds on these issues. Rather, like Respondent's argument that any agreements reached by Roth were subject to later review and approval by Hols, I find the position is not supported by the facts.

In reaching this decision regarding the agreement reached on September 9 and recapitulated on September 14, I have considered the entire bargaining process as revealed on the record as a whole and find that the General Counsel has clearly met her burden of establishing that a final and binding agreement was reached by the parties.

Having made these factual determinations and applying the case law cited above, I find that Respondent was obligated to sign and abide by the collective-bargaining agreement as of September 14, 1987, and that its failure thereafter to do so constitutes a violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.[4]

b. The unilateral change allegations

The unilateral change allegations are, like the dispute concerning whether agreement was reached, not subject to serious disagreement concerning the controlling case law. The General Counsel correctly cites the Supreme Court's decision in NLRB v. Katz, 369 U.S. 736 (1962), for the proposition that a unilateral change in represented employees' terms and conditions of employment is a violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act irrespective of the subjective good or bad faith of the employer. The General Counsel further cites case law for the proposition that work rules are terms and conditions of employment and mandatory subjects of bargaining within the meaning of the Katz decision, citing Timken Roller Bearing Co., 70 NLRB 500, 502 (1946), enf. denied on other grounds 161 F.2d 949 (6th Cir. 1947).

Respondent makes the following argument on brief:

---

[4] The General Counsel further contends that Respondent's actions following the September 9 agreement were based on a desire to end its relationship with the Charging Party in reliance on certain decertification activity undertaken by the employees, which was ultimately held to be without force or effect by the Regional Director. Respondent did not assert any conduct by employees in justifying a withdrawal of recognition of the Charging Party. Rather, Respondent has at no time in this litigation challenged the Charging Party's representative status concerning employees in the unit. Inasmuch as the allegation turns on whether an agreement was reached, rather than whether Respondent acted in good or bad faith in refusing to sign the collective-bargaining agreement, I shall make no findings respecting the General Counsel's further allegations in this regard.

> With regard to the alleged unilateral changes in work rules, the record establishes that there was no change at all. The work rules were in existence at all times material. The memos were posted pursuant to some growing abuses of these rules by the employees.
>
> In any event, if these were changes in the rules, they were not unilateral changes. The Union and the Employer had already agreed upon contract language which gave the Employer the right to institute rules without prior negotiations with the Union. Accordingly, the unilateral change allegations must fail.

Respondent's argument that there was a previously existing rule covering the matters in question fails with respect to the antiloitering notice. The employee handbook, relevant sections that are quoted above, deals with loitering when punched in. That rule may not fairly be read to cover the state of affairs following an employees' punching out. The employee handbook therefore gives Respondent no shelter as to that allegation. The handbook does explicitly cover the luncheon period rule. There is no doubt, however, that this rule had been changed both by practice and by an explicit memo posted by Respondent. The later return to the strict handbook policy was therefore a change in work rules backed by the threat of discipline, that had a potentially significant effect on employees' wages.

Respondent's final argument is that the Union and the Company had agreed to contract language giving Respondent the right to set rules such as those under challenge here. This defense may be further augmented by the fact that I have found, supra, the collective-bargaining agreement was agreed to in September and was binding on Respondent and the Charging Party before the November memos that are under challenge here. If there had been no collective-bargaining agreement but, rather, only a partial agreement as to the management-rights clause as part of a collective-bargaining agreement not yet fully agreed to, Respondent's defense would fail. One may not rely on partial agreements concerning an as yet unexecuted collective-bargaining agreement. Thus, absent some specific agreement to the contrary, the parties must await a complete agreement before relying on partial agreements preceding the final resolution. Accordingly, Respondent's argument that the management-rights clause had been agreed to even if the remainder of the contract had not been agreed to is not a defense to the unilateral change allegations.

It remains to be resolved, however, in light of my findings that the contract was in effect, whether Respondent may assert a contract defense while simultaneously denying that the contract was in effect. I find that Resonent is not entitled to the benefits of the collective-bargaining agreement that might otherwise accrue to it while simultaneously denying the contract's existence. In essence Respondent may not have its cake and eat it too. The very nature of an acknowledgement of the existence of a binding collective-bargaining agreement establishes a stability and security to a collective-bargaining relationship that is absent when one party denies such a contract exists. Thus, for example, whereas the management-rights clause may in fact allow rule changes, a denial of the validity of the contract as a whole constitutes a denial of the efficacy of the grievance and arbitration clause, and in essence seeks to assert rights under the document without conceding any matching obligations. Such an asymmetry is inequitable and may not be allowed to prevail. Thus, this argument gives no defense to Respondent.

In summary then, I have found that in November 1987 Respondent made two significant changes in work rules concerning unit employees which, backed by the threat of discipline, had a significant impact on unit employees. I have further found, and the parties do not dispute, that the Union was at no time notified or provided an opportunity to bargain respecting these changes. Accordingly, pursuant to the cases cited supra, Respondent's actions violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the purposes of the Act, including the posting of remedial notices in English, and should the Regional Director determine under the circumstances at the time of the posting warrant additional languages.[5]

Having found that Respondent at all times since September 14, 1987, has failed and refused to acknowledge and sign the collective-bargaining agreement reached between the parties on September 9, 1987, I shall order Respondent to execute the agreement and supply the Charging Party with signed copies of the contract. Further, I shall order Respondent to retroactively apply the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement from the date of its effective term, making whole, as necessary, all employees who lost wages or other benefits because of Respondent's failure to apply the terms and conditions of the contract in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950). Interest shall be included on the monetary losses involved, with interest calculated in accordance with the policy of the Board set forth in New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).

The Respondent shall further be ordered to rescind the unilateral changes in company rules and practices made in November 1987 rescinding as necessary any and all discipline or other adverse actions following from employee breaches of the unilaterally changed rules. Respondent shall expunge from its records any and all references to breaches of these unilaterally changed rules and practices by employees and shall notify those employees and the Charging Party, in writing, that such expunction has occurred and that previous breaches will not be the basis of subsequent adverse action against the employees. Sterling Sugars, 261 NLRB 472 (1982). This remedy will include restoring employees who lost lunch deduction waivers and will include interest on all losses pursuant to the cases cited supra.

[5] Laborers Local 383, 266 NLRB 934, 939–940 fn. 9 (1983).

The Charging Party, on brief, requests that the election bar arising from the certification on September 24, 1986, be extended and continued until the collective-bargaining agreement is executed. Such an action is unnecessary inasmuch as the Board normally does not entertain elections during the time that an employer is engaging in unremedied violations of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act rising to the level of repudiation of a collective-bargaining agreement. Further, the collective-bargaining agreement, found to be effective here even if it is not as yet signed, precludes an election under normal circumstances.

The General Counsel has sought a visitatorial clause in its proposed remedy. The Board in its recent decision, Cherokee Marine Terminal, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988), established standards for the inclusion of such relief in a normal remedy. Those standards have not been met here. Accordingly, I shall not include the relief sought.

On these findings of fact and the entire record, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Charging Party is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by, at all times since September 14, 1987, failing and refusing to execute the collective-bargaining agreement reached with the Charging Party on September 9, 1987.

4. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the Act by making unilateral changes in employee work rules in November 1987 concerning:

(a) Employee presence in the facility following punching out; and

(b) Denying employees the opportunity to obtain credit for lunchtime worked.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[6]

ORDER

The Respondent, Waste Systems Corp., Albert Lea, Minnesota, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to execute a collective-bargaining agreement reached on September 9, 1987, with the Charging Party concerning employees in the following unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time production and maintenance employees employed at or out of Respondent's facilities in Albert, Lea, Austin, Blue Earth and Fairmont, Minnesota and Lake Mills, Iowa; excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Changing rules and practices governing employee presence in work areas after punching out and employee practices concerning credit for lunches worked with supervisory approval without providing notice and an opportunity to the Charging Party to bargain concerning the rules.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Execute and return to the Charging Party copies of the contract reached on September 9, 1987, with the Charging Party concerning the employees in the unit.

(b) Apply the contract retroactively to its commencement date, making employees whole, with interest, for any loss of wages and other benefits that would have been received or accrued but for Respondent's failure to apply the collective-bargaining agreement from its effective date.

(c) Restore the status quo ante, rescinding the personnel rules and practice changes made in November 1987 concerning employee payments for lunchtime not taken and for rules and practices governing remaining in the work areas after punching out, making employees whole with interest.

(d) Rescind and expunge all references to any employee violations of the rule implemented in November 1987, as described above, notifying those employees and the Charging Party, in writing, that this has been done and such violations will not be used as a basis for future action against the employees.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(f) Post at all of its facilities where unit employees are employed copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, and translations in other languages determined by the Regional Director, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[6] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[7] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(g) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

Stern Entertainment System, Inc. t/a Heaven and A. Blane Volovich, Jacqueline M. Fritz, Truman Fees, Carl Morris, and William Croft, Jr. Cases 6–CA–14978 and 6–CA–15011

September 23, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER REMANDING

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On February 25, 1983, the Regional Director for Region 6 of the National Labor Relations Board issued an amended consolidated complaint in Cases 6–CA–14978 and 6–CA–15011 containing allegations from the charges in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038, which had been dismissed by the Regional Director on February 23, 1983.[1] On March 7, 1983, the Respondent filed a Second Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, alleging that the General Counsel had improperly included allegations from the dismissed charges in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038, and had improperly reinstated the previously dismissed charge in Case 6–CA–15011. On April 6, 1983, the Regional Director referred the Respondent's second motion to the Board.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

We shall deny the Respondent's Second Motion for Partial Summary Judgment and allow the General Counsel to litigate the allegations involving employees Croft, Fees, Fritz, and Morris. For the reasons set forth in our decision in Redd-I, Inc., 290 NLRB 1115 (1988), we do not find the withdrawal and dismissal of earlier timely charges concerning these employees relevant in deciding whether the allegations are closely related to the allegations of the pending timely filed charge involving employee Volovich. At this stage in the proceeding, we find these allegations are not barred under Section 10(b) because the alleged violations occurred within 6 months of the timely Volovich charge and they appear to be factually and legally related to the allegations of that charge. Therefore, we shall permit the parties to present evidence on all the complaint allegations so that a judge can decide whether the otherwise untimely allegations are closely related to the Volovich charge.

The relevant procedural history of these allegations is as follows. On October 6, 1981, a charge was filed in Case 6–CA–14978, alleging that A. Blane Volovich had been discharged on October 6, 1981, because of his union activities. On October 19, 1981, a charge was filed in Case 6–CA–15011 alleging that Jacqueline M. Fritz had been refused a promotion because of her union activities. On October 26, 1981, the charge in Case 6–CA–15011 was amended to include, inter alia, the allegation that Fritz had been discharged on October 23, 1981, because of her union activities. On October 23, 1981, a charge was filed in Case 6–CA–15030 alleging that Truman Fees had been discharged on October 22, 1981, because of his union activities. On October 23, 1981, a charge was filed in Case 6–CA–15031 alleging that Carl Morris had been discharged on October 22, 1981, because of his union activities. On October 26, 1981, a charge was filed in Case 6–CA–15038 alleging that William Croft, Jr. had been discharged on October 22, 1981, because of his union activities.

On December 29, 1981, the charge in Case 6–CA–14978 was amended to allege that Volovich had been discharged because of his protected concerted activities. On January 28, 1982, the Acting Regional Director issued a complaint in Case 6–CA–14978 alleging, inter alia, that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by discharging Volovich for his protected concerted activities. On the same date, the Acting Regional Director approved withdrawals of the charges in Cases 6–CA–15030 (Fees), 6–CA–15031 (Morris), and 6–CA–15038 (Croft) and dismissed the charge filed by Fritz in Case 6-CA–15011.

On August 3, 1982, alleging newly discovered evidence, the Regional Director revoked his earlier approval of the withdrawals in Cases 6–CA–15030 (Fees), 6–CA–15031 (Morris), and 6–CA–15038 (Croft), rescinded the dismissal in Case 6–CA–15011 (Fritz), and reopened the matter for further investigation into the alleged charges. On October 8, 1982, the Acting Regional Director issued a consolidated complaint in all of these cases alleging, inter alia, that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by discharging Volovich and that it violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) by discharging Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz.

On February 4, 1983, the Respondent filed a Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, contending that under Winer Motors, 265 NLRB 1457 (1982), the Regional Director was precluded from reinstating the withdrawn charges filed by Fees, Morris, and Croft in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and [1] On February 4, 1983, the Respondent had filed a Motion for Partial Summary Judgment contending that the Regional Director had improperly reinstated the withdrawn charges in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038 and the dismissed charge in Case 6–CA–15011. On February 16, 1983, the above-entitled proceeding had been transferred to the Board. On February 23, 1983, the Regional Director had dismissed the charges in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038, thus rendering the Respondent's motion moot. On February 25, 1983, the Acting Regional Director issued this amended consolidated complaint, which included the allegations from the three dismissed charges.

6–CA–15038. The Respondent further argued that while Winer Motors allowed the General Counsel to reinstate dismissed,[2] as opposed to withdrawn, charges the Regional Director in this case nevertheless improperly reinstated the charge filed by Fritz in Case 6–CA–15011 because he failed to disclose the newly discovered evidence on which he purportedly relied. On February 15 and 16, 1983, the charges in Cases 6–CA–14978 (Volovich) and 6–CA–15011 (Fritz) were amended to include the discharges of Fees, Morris, Croft and Fritz, and to allege that all the discharges, including Volovich's, violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3). On February 23, 1983, the Regional Director dismissed the charges in Cases 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038 under Winer Motors, thereby rendering moot the Respondent's motion to dismiss those charges. On February 25, 1983, the Regional Director issued an amended consolidated complaint in Cases 6–CA–14978 (Volovich) and 6–CA–15011 (Fritz), which included the allegations concerning Fees, Morris, and Croft that had been contained in their dismissed charges and which alleged that all five employees had been discharged because of their union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3).

In her February 28, 1983 response to the Respondent's first Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, the General Counsel contended that the Regional Director had properly included the allegations contained in the Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz charges in the consolidated complaint in Case 6–CA–14978, which was based on a timely filed charge that had never been withdrawn or dismissed. The General Counsel argued that the allegations in the Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz charges were closely related to the allegations in the charge still pending on behalf of Volovich in Case 6–CA–14978 and were properly included in the pending complaint under the "closely related" test set forth in Gocat Inc., 257 NLRB 270 (1981). Gocat holds that a complaint based on a timely filed charge may allege violations not alleged in the charge if they are closely related to the violations named in the charge and occurred within 6 months before the filing of the charge.

In response to the General Counsel, the Respondent filed a Second Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on March 7, 1983. It contends that the Board's intent in Winer Motors would be subverted if the February 25, 1983 amended consolidated complaint is permitted to be litigated; that the charges filed by Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz related to their union activity and thus cannot be attached to the charge filed by Volovich, which was based on concerted activity predating the arrival of the Union; and that the General Counsel reinstated Fritz' charge based on the discovery of new evidence without disclosing the nature of this evidence. On April 25, 1983, the General Counsel filed a response to the Respondent's second motion reiterating her contentions that the pending complaint based on Volovich's charge was properly amended to include Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz as additional discriminatees, because their discharges occurred during the same organizational campaign as the discharge of Volovich.

We find merit in the General Counsel's argument that the "closely related" test is applicable here. In Redd-I, supra, the Board held that in deciding whether allegations are closely related, it would apply the traditional "closely related" test to determine if an otherwise untimely allegation is factually and legally related to the allegations of a timely charge, without regard to whether another charge encompassing the untimely allegation has been withdrawn or dismissed.

In this case, we find that the bare allegations do not provide enough information for us to determine whether the allegations meet the traditional "closely related" test described in Redd-I. Clearly, the discharges of Fees, Morris, Croft, and Fritz[3] occurred within 6 months before the filing of Volovich's timely charge. Further, it appears that the otherwise untimely allegations are of the same class as the allegations in the Volovich charge because they all involve discharges in retaliation against union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(3).[4] However, we cannot tell whether all the discharges arose from the same factual situation or sequence of events. The complaint alleges that all the discharges involve similar conduct during the same 2-week period, and the General Counsel contends that they all have the same object because they all arose out of the same organizational campaign.

[2] See Winer Motors, supra at 1459–1460, former Member Zimmerman's concurring opinion.

[3] As noted earlier, the Regional Director, in accord with Winer Motors, supra, dismissed the charges filed by Fees, Morris, and Croft that had been withdrawn. Regarding Fritz, the Regional Director found that because her charge had not been withdrawn but dismissed, Winer Motors did not preclude its reinstatement. However, the Board has subsequently reversed that aspect of Winer Motors. Thus, in Ducane Heating Corp., 273 NLRB 1389 (1985), the Board found that withdrawn and dismissed charges should be treated alike and, absent fraudulent concealment of unlawful activity, neither can be reinstated outside the 6-month limitations proviso of Sec. 10(b). Here, there is no contention of fraudulent concealment concerning Fritz' charge which would warrant extending the limitations proviso. Accordingly, the Regional Director erred in reinstating the charge in Case 6–CA–15011. However, for the reasons set forth in this decision, the dismissal of Fritz' charge does not foreclose litigation on the merits of the allegations contained in her charge if they prove to be closely related to the allegations contained in the charge timely filed by Volovich.

[4] The original Volovich charge as well as the second amended charge in his case allege his discharge was for union activities.

However, we have no other information about the circumstances surrounding these discharges, such as the reasons given or the events leading up to the discharge of each employee. On this record it would be premature to decide whether all of the allegations are closely related. Therefore, we will allow litigation on the merits of all the allegations in order to decide if they are closely related.

ORDER

It is ordered that the Respondent's Second Motion for Summary Judgment is denied.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the charge in Case 6–CA–15011 is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the proceeding is remanded to the Regional Director for Region 6 to arrange a hearing and issue notice to the parties.

CHAIRMAN STEPHENS, dissenting.

In accord with the views expressed in my dissenting opinion in Redd-I, Inc., 290 NLRB 1115 (1988), I find that the circumstances presented in this case call for granting the Respondent's Second Motion for Partial Summary Judgment regarding allegations as to employees Fritz, Fees, Morris, and Croft. Even assuming that the "closely related" doctrine would permit consideration of the allegations as to these four employees under the Volovich charge if the charges in Cases 6–CA–15011, 6–CA–15030, 6–CA–15031, and 6–CA–15038 had never been filed in the first instance, the sequence of charge filings and withdrawals here is such that the Respondent would not reasonably have believed at the expiration of the 10(b) period that it might have to litigate allegations pertaining to these four employees.

In my view, the critical facts are these. The first unfair labor practice charge filed on October 6, 1981, alleged that Volovich had been discharged on that day because of union activities, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1). Later that same month, charges were filed as to employees Fees, Croft, and Morris, alleging that they were discharged on October 22 for their union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1). Charges were also filed in late October on behalf of employee Fritz for a denial of a promotion followed by a discharge on October 23—both alleged to be based on union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(3).

On December 29, however, Volovich's October 6 charge was amended so as to replace the 8(a)(3) allegation with an allegation that he had been discharged, in violation of Section 8(a)(1), for engaging in protected concerted activity. On January 28, 1982, complete withdrawals were accepted on three of the other employees' charges; the fourth employee's charge was dismissed; and a complaint issued based solely on the Volovich 8(a)(1) charge. No further charges were filed by any of these employees in 1982. Thus, when the 10(b) period had run in April as to the charges filed on behalf of the employees other than Volovich, the Respondent knew that the Regional Director had considered and rejected claims that the Respondent had discharged employees in October 1981 to discourage the union organizing campaign, and it would not reasonably have contemplated litigating any matter other than Volovich's discharge allegedly for engaging in a concerted protest over working conditions. Accordingly, for these reasons, I would grant the Respondent's Second Motion for Partial Summary Judgment.

Madison Industries, Inc. and Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO and Martin H. Hansen, Petitioner. Cases 21–CA–24902 and 21–RD–2169

September 26, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On a charge filed by Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO on August 14, 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint and notice of hearing in Case 21–CA–24902 on May 4, 1987, alleging that the Respondent (the Employer) has engaged in certain unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act. The Respondent filed an answer denying the commission of any unfair labor practices.

On November 2, 1987, the Respondent, the Union, the General Counsel, and the Petitioner filed with the Board a Stipulation of Facts, with certain attachments, and entered a Joint Motion to Transfer Proceedings Directly to the Board. The parties waived a hearing and issuance of a decision by an administrative law judge and indicated their desire to submit the case directly to the Board for findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decision and order. The parties also agreed that the stipulation of facts, with certain attachments, would constitute the entire record before the Board. On March 2, 1988, the Board issued an order granting the parties' motion, approving the stipulation, and transferring the proceedings to the Board. Thereafter, the General Counsel and the Respondent filed briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

On the entire record and the briefs in this proceeding, the Board makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent is a California corporation engaged in manufacturing prefabricated structures and operates a facility located at 1900 East 64th Street, Los Angeles, California. In the normal course and conduct of its business operations the Respondent annually purchases and receives goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers outside the State of California. The parties stipulated and we find that the Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Stipulated Facts

The following employees of the Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective-bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All metal building industry journeymen, apprentices, janitors, steel shop leadmen, finish line leadmen and painters employed by the Employer at its facility located at 1900 East 64th Street, Los Angeles, California; excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

Since about August 1976, and at all times material, the Union has been the duly designated exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees in the above-described unit, and since about August 1976 the Union has been recognized as that representative by the Respondent. Recognition has been embodied in successive collective-bargaining agreements, the most recent of which was effective by its terms from July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1986.

Since about August 1976 the Union has been the representative for the purposes of collective-bargaining for a majority of the employees in the above-described unit and by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act is the exclusive representative of all employees in that unit for the purposes of collective-bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment.

At all times material, Sam Frey has been president of the Respondent, and John Frey Jr. (John Frey), has been general manager of the Respondent. Each of them is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and an agent of the Respondent within the meaning of Section 2(2) and (13) of the Act.

Pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement, a decertification election by secret ballot was conducted on May 16, 1986,[1] among the employees of the Employer in the above-described unit. The results of the election were 38 votes for the Union, 8 against, with an insufficient number of challenged ballots to affect the outcome.

[1] All dates are 1986 unless otherwise indicated.

On May 22 the Employer filed timely objections to the election. On June 5 and 9 the Employer, the Union, and the Petitioner entered into a stipulation and agreed that a second election be conducted. In accordance with the parties' stipulation, on June 18, the Regional Director issued a Report on Objections recommending to the Board that the May 16 election be set aside, and that a second election be conducted. On July 11 the Board in its Decision, Order, and Direction of Second Election adopted the Regional Director's recommendation and ordered that a second election be held. The second election was scheduled for August 8.

About August 6 the Respondent, at its facility, without notice to the Union, hand distributed directly to all of its employees in the unit a copy of a document that included a cover letter that was addressed to each unit employee individually. The cover letter stated:

> The attached document was prepared by Madison Industries for all non-union employees. The document and the assurances contained within it are your guarantee of fair treatment. The future of Madison Industries depends on good relations with the company personnel. The future of the company also depends on establishing reasonable costs for wages and benefits. This company does not feel that either of these two can be accomplished with the 108 Sheetmetal Union. The management views this Union as a parasite. Your union dues and the company's benefit payments support the union bosses without any benefit to you or this company. I urge you to take this document as a commitment between you and this company and vote NO on August 8, 1986. It is time to step out of the union past and into the profit sharing present.

The document presented a number of terms and conditions of employment different from those of the Union's most recent contract, which had expired on June 30, along with provisions concerning holidays and vacation taken directly from the expired agreement. It contained a new medical plan, which the Respondent characterized as providing medical benefits equivalent to or better than those available under the medical plan of the previous collective-bargaining agreement, and included a "written guarantee" that wages would not be reduced from existing levels and would be indexed to the Government's cost of living index with no decrease in the event of a drop in the index. The Respondent further offered the employees an undefined profit-sharing and stock ownership plan in lieu of a traditional pension plan. The document also contained provisions regarding seniority and layoffs that differed from those contained in the most recent collective-bargaining agreement. Thus, the Respondent intended to make "seniority" solely a function of the employees' willingness and ability to perform the work required; layoffs would be contingent on an employee's ability and willingness to perform the work at hand, with the least able employees laid off first. This was a change from the most recent agreement that made chronological seniority the determining factor in deciding which employees of equal ability should be laid off.

The document also differed from the recently expired agreement by specifying offensive conduct for which employees could be discharged, extending the period during the day in which the employees' shift could be scheduled, and offering merit wage increases to those employees who could meet certain general guidelines regarding ability and willingness to work, attendance, and tardiness during the prior year. Finally, the Respondent made its implementation contingent on the Union's defeat in the upcoming decertification election. In this regard, the proposal stated:

> This document shall remain in force indefinately if utilized. This document will expire and become null and void if the union is not voted out.

On August 7, within 24 hours of the election scheduled for August 8, the Respondent, through Sam Frey and John Frey, conducted a meeting at its plant among approximately 30 to 40 employees. At this meeting, Sam Frey and John Frey spoke for approximately 5 minutes and made the following statements:

(1) That the Respondent's competition was nonunion and that the Respondent would have difficulty competing because of the Union.

(2) That the Union would make the Respondent "go broke."

(3) That it did not matter who won the election, because whichever side lost would protest the election.

(4) That John Frey would not sign a contract with the Union any more.

On August 8, 1986, the Board conducted the second decertification election (among the employees in the above-described unit). The results of the election were 12 votes for the Union, 27 against, with an insufficient number of challenged ballots to affect the outcome.

On August 14 the Union filed the instant unfair labor practice charges and objections to the August 8 election. On May 20, 1987, the Acting Regional Director issued a supplemental report on objections and order directing hearing and order consolidating cases and notice of hearing in which he concluded that the issues raised in Case 21–RD–2169 by the Union's Objections 1, 2, and 4 were closely related to the issues involved in Case 21–CA–24902 and could best be resolved in a consolidated proceeding. The Acting Regional Director also approved the Union's withdrawal of all other objections.

B. Contentions of the Parties

The General Counsel contends that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to bargain with the Union in good faith when it bypassed the Union and sought to bargain directly with its employees by presenting them with a collective-bargaining proposal on August 6. The General Counsel further contends that the written statements contained in the cover letter and collective-bargaining proposal distributed to each employee individually on August 6 and the oral statements made by Sam Frey and John Frey during a meeting with employees on August 7, unlawfully restrained and coerced employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Thus, the General Counsel asserts that the August 6 document and cover letter to employees contained promises of benefits if employees voted against the Union, and a threat of plant closure unless the Union was voted out (i.e., because of what the Respondent implied was the Union's anticipated unwillingness to agree to cost-reduction steps proposed by the Respondent). The General Counsel contends that the August 7 remarks of Sam and John Frey to employees also influenced and coerced employees to vote against the Union by (1) threatening that the Respondent could not compete, would "go broke," and would go out of business unless the employees voted the Union out, and (2) by threatening to file objections to the election, and threatening not to sign a contract, if the employees voted to keep the Union, thus conveying to the employees the futility of voting for the Union.

Finally, the General Counsel argues that the Respondent's actions on August 6 and 7, are sufficiently egregious to warrant the issuance of a bargaining order as established in NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575 (1969). In this regard, the General Counsel asserts that during the period prior to and including the August 8 election day the Union continued to enjoy the presumption of majority support of the bargaining unit, and that the Respondent's unlawful conduct was within a category of violations that the Board has found to have a lingering effect on employees, and to be more resistant to the Board's traditional remedies. More specifically, the General Counsel emphasizes that the Respondent offered, through its August 6 contract proposal, wage guarantees and benefits expressly conditioned on the Union's ouster; that during the August 7 meeting both the Respondent's president and general manager explicitly threatened plant closure and flatly refused to sign a contract with the Union; that the Respondent denigrated the Union in its August 6 letter, and verbally expressed on August 7 the futility of the employees selecting a representative when the Respondent had no intention of bargaining with any representative chosen; and that most of the unit employees witnessed the Respondent's unlawful conduct.

The Respondent does not claim that it did not engage in the preelection conduct described above. Moreover, the Respondent does not contest the presumed continuing majority status of the Union as of August 8. Rather, the Respondent asserts that "the Board is being requested to decide a narrow issue: Whether the facts as stipulated warrant the extreme remedy of a Gissel bargaining order." The Respondent argues that the most appropriate method of redress is not a Gissel bargaining order, but a new election, thereby allowing for employee free choice in selecting a collective-bargaining representative.

The Respondent contends that its August 7 remarks to the employees (1) that the Respondent's competition was nonunion and that the Respondent would have difficulty competing because of the Union; and (2) that the Union would make Respondent "go broke" are permitted under Gissel as objective statements of economic fact based on the Respondent's knowledge and experience. The Respondent further asserts that its August 7 remarks (1) that it did not matter who won the election, because whichever side lost would protest the election; and (2) that John Frey would not sign a contract with the Union any more, constitute only minor, less extensive, unfair labor practices that would have only a slight impact on the election process and would therefore not warrant a Gissel bargaining order.

Finally, the Respondent contends that the document and cover letter, hand distributed to each of its employees on August 6 was not a promise of benefits but a comparison of its benefits plan with that plan offered by the Union and that even if its statements were promises, they were not so extraordinary as to be incapable of being erased by traditional remedies.

C. Discussion and Conclusions

1. Violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1)

We find that the Respondent refused to bargain with, and attempted to bypass and undermine the Union, and deal directly with its employees by unilaterally presenting to the employees a document that was, in effect, a contract proposal. As noted above, the Union has been the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the unit employees since August 1976. The Respondent, therefore, had a duty to bargain with the Union and to refrain from dealing directly with unit employees over terms and conditions of employment. The August 6, 1986 letter and attached contract proposal, which was hand-delivered to each unit employee, proposed changes in such terms and conditions of employment as the health care benefits plan, pension plan, and the Company's policy on seniority and layoffs. The contract proposal made clear that the terms it contained would become null and void if the Union was not voted out. The document went beyond merely comparing the terms the Respondent could offer with the terms of the recently expired contract with the Union because, as fully set forth above, the document made an offer contingent on the ousting of the Union. We conclude that by such conduct, the Respondent has bargained directly with the unit employees and sought to undermine the status of the Union as their exclusive collective-bargaining representative in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. See Coast Engraving Co., 282 NLRB 1236, 1250 (1987); Gentzler Tool Corp., 268 NLRB 330 (1983), enfd. 778 F.2d 1211 (6th Cir. 1985).

2. Violations of Section 8(a)(1)

Section 7 of the Act guarantees employees the right "to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective-bargaining or other mutual aid or protection . . . ." Section 8(a)(1) of the Act makes it an unfair labor practice for an employer "to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees" in the exercise of their Section 7 rights. An Employer violates Section 8(a)(1) of the Act if its actions would tend to coerce a reasonable employee, without regard to intent or whether an employee is actually coerced. Hanes Hosiery, 219 NLRB 338 (1975). However, Section 8(c) of the Act provides that the expression of any view will not be an unfair labor practice, if it contains no threat of reprisal or promise of benefit.

In NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575, 617–619, the Supreme Court balanced the requirements of these statutory provisions as follows:

> Any assessment of the precise scope of employer expression, of course, must be made in the context of its labor relations setting. Thus, an employer's rights cannot outweigh the equal rights of the employees to associate freely, as those rights are embodied in [Section] 7 and protected by [Section] 8(a)(1) and the proviso to [Section] 8(c). And any balancing of those rights must take into account the economic dependence of the employees on their employers, and the necessary tendency of the former, because of that relationship, to pick up intended implications of the latter that might be more readily dismissed by a more disinterested ear.
>
> [A]n employer is free to communicate to his employees any of his general views about unionism or any of his specific views about a particular union, so long as the communications do not contain a "threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit." He may even make a prediction as to the precise effect he believes unionization will have on his company. In such a case, however, the prediction must be carefully phrased on the basis of objective fact to convey an employer's belief as to demonstrably probable consequences beyond his control or to convey a management decision already arrived at to close the plant in case of unionization. See Textile Workers v. Darlington Mfg. Co., 380 U.S. 263, 274, fn. 20 (1965). If there is any implication that an employer may or may not take action solely on his own initiative for reasons unrelated to economic necessities and known only to him, the statement is no longer a reasonable prediction based on available facts but a threat of retaliation based on misrepresentation and coercion, and as such without the protection of the First Amendment. We therefore agree with the court below that "[c]onveyance of the employer's belief, even though sincere, that unionization will or may result in the closing of the plant is not a statement of fact unless, which is most improbable, the eventuality of closing is capable of proof. 397 F.2d 157, 160.

Examining the Respondent's conduct and statements in light of these standards, we find that the Respondent has made threats and promises that exceed the expression of views permitted by Section 8(c) of the Act.

On August 6, 1986, 2 days before the decertification election, the Respondent provided to its employees a document that was, in effect, a contract proposal containing numerous changes and improvements in the terms and provisions of the recently expired collective-bargaining agreement. The Respondent expressly conditioned implementation of these proposed new terms and provisions on the employees' rejection of the Union in the election. By this conduct the Respondent has unlawfully promised benefits in return for the ouster of the Union, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Collectramatic, Inc., 267 NLRB 866, 870 (1983).

The next day, August 7, Sam and John Frey, the Respondent's president and general manager, respectively, told the employees that if the Union was not voted out the Respondent would have difficulty—indeed, the employees were told that continued unionization would cause the Respondent to "go broke." We find that the Respondent has effectively predicted plant closure if the Union was not voted out.

As the Supreme Court has held, predicting plant closure is not a statement of fact permissible under Section 8(c) of the Act unless the eventuality of plant closure is capable of proof—a circumstance that the Court considered to be "most improbable." Here, the Respondent's prediction of plant closure—i.e., that it would "go broke"—if the Union was retained was clearly not "carefully phrased on the basis of objective fact" (395 U.S. at 618) and most certainly cannot be said to convey the Respondent's "belief as to demonstrably probable consequences beyond [the Respondent's] control." (395 U.S. at 618.) The stipulated record sets forth no facts on which the Respondent could be said to have based an objective belief that plant closure was a demonstrably probable consequence of continued unionization. Accordingly, we find that the Respondent's prediction that the Union would make it "go broke" constituted an unlawful threat of plant closure if the employees voted to keep the Union. Walter Garson, Jr. & Associates, 276 NLRB 1226, 1231–1232 (1985); Engineered Control Systems, 274 NLRB 1308, 1313 (1985). Cf. Churchill's Restaurant, 276 NLRB 775 (1985) (the prediction that the employer would go out of business if union won the election is not unlawful where the employer expressly provided objective support for its prediction: previous experience with particular wage demands of the union or specific decline in business).

In their August 7 remarks, the Freys also told the employees that regardless of the outcome of the election, that if the Union won the election the Respondent would file objections, and that in any event, John Frey would not sign another contract with the Union. These statements not only indicated to the employees the short-term futility of their engaging in the representation process but also the long-term futility of retaining the Union as their collective-bargaining representative. These remarks reveal the Respondent's unwillingness to recognize and bargain in good faith with the Union, which is coercive, for it had the effect of discouraging the organizational efforts of the employees. These statements intimidated and coerced the employees in their choice of whether to continue to be represented by the Union. We find that the Respondent's remarks in this regard violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. See Without Reservation, 280 NLRB 1408 1412 1418 (1986).

3. Objectionable conduct

As noted above, Objections 1, 2, and 4 to the August 8, 1986, second decertification election are closely related to the unfair labor practice allegations. We have found above that the Respondent violated the Act during the 2 days prior to the election by bypassing the Union and dealing directly with the employees; by promising benefits and threatening plant closure; and by threatening to bargain in bad faith with the Union by never signing a contract with the Union. It is well established that conduct violative of the Act is conduct that interferes with free choice in an election. Dal-Tex Optical Co., 137 NLRB 1782, 1786 (1962). Consequently, we will set aside the results of the August 8 election. See SDC Investment, Inc., 284 NLRB 131, 134 (1987).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The following employees of the Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective-bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All metal building industry journeymen, apprentices, janitors, steel shop leadmen, finish line leadmen and painters employed by the Employer at its facility located at 1900 East 64th Street, Los Angeles, California; excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. At all times since about August 1976, including all times material, the Union has been and is now the duly designated exclusive representative of the employees in the above-described unit for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By refusing to bargain with the Union, bypassing it and dealing directly with its employees in unilaterally presenting the employees with a contract proposal, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. By promising employees potentially improved benefits and terms and conditions of employment if the employees voted to decertify the Union; by indicating to employees the futility of selecting the Union as their collective-bargaining representative; and by threatening to close the plant if the employees voted for continued union representation, the Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The above violations of the Act are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, we will order that it cease and desist and that it take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

The Respondent has not contested the fact that it engaged in the conduct discussed above, and has not argued against setting aside the August 8, 1986 decertification election based on that misconduct. Nor has the Respondent challenged the presumptive continued majority status of this incumbent Union. Rather, the Respondent maintains that the most appropriate method of redress for its misconduct is not the bargaining order sought by the General Counsel under authority of NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575 (1969), but another decertification election.[2] For the reasons discussed below, we find, in agreement with the General Counsel, that the nature of the unfair labor practices engaged in by the Respondent effectively precludes the holding therefore warranted.

In Gissel, the Court approved the Board's use of bargaining orders in cases when unfair labor practices, although perhaps not "outrageous" or "pervasive," nonetheless have the tendency to undermine a union's majority strength and impede the election process, and when the possibility of erasing the effects of unfair labor practices and ensuring a fair election is slight. Id. at 614. We find this to be such a case.

There is no question that the Respondent's misconduct was pervasive. The Respondent's contract proposal, which contained an unlawful promise of benefits, was hand delivered to every employee in the unit. Thus, every employee was not only the immediate recipient of an unlawful promise, but also was the target of the Respondent's unlawful bypassing of the Union. Furthermore, the threats never to sign a collective-bargaining agreement and to close the plant were made at an employee meeting of some 30 to 40 employees in a unit of approximately 58 employees.

These pervasive unfair labor practices were committed by the President and the General Manager, the Respondent's highest management officials. The Board has held that the effect of unlawful conduct is heightened when it is committed by top management officials who are readily perceived as representing company policy. See, e.g., Cartridge Actuated Devices, 282 NLRB 426 (1986).

In addition to the pervasiveness of the misconduct, the effect of which is heightened by the participation of top management officials, the nature of the misconduct indicates that traditional remedies are not likely to be effective. It is well settled that threats of plant closure are one of the most coercive actions an employer can take in seeking to influence an election. Long-Airdox, 277 NLRB 1157, 1160 (1985). As the Supreme Court stated in Gissel, these threats are among the types of unfair labor practices that "destroy election conditions for a longer period of time than others." Gissel, above, 395 U.S. at 611 fn. 31. In addition, the Respondent's unlawful remarks conveyed to employees its disregard for the very traditional remedy it now asserts is sufficient to cure the effects of its misconduct. Its president and its general manager told the employees that the election process would resolve nothing and that regardless of the eventual outcome, the Respondent would not sign a contract with the Union. Thus Sam and John Frey told unit employees that the election results would be contested, no matter what the result, and that the Re-

[2] NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co. involved an attempt by the Union to secure initial recognition. In that case the Court found that in certain circumstances the employee sentiments expressed in union authorization cards were better protected by the issuance of a bargaining order. Here, the General Counsel has established that a majority of the unit employees desire to be represented by the Union on the basis of a rebuttable presumption arising from the Union's initial recognition and successive collective-bargaining agreements with the Union. The Respondent does not question the continuing majority status of the Union, nor is there evidence to suggest that the presumption of continued majority support has been rebutted. In these circumstances, a Gissel bargaining order may be used to remedy unfair labor practices when appropriate. See, e.g., Michigan Products, 236 NLRB 1143 (1978).

spondent would not sign another contract with the Union. It is highly improbable that these remarks would not still be of concern to employees entering a third decertification election.

In light of the violations we conclude that the possibility of erasing the effects of the Respondent's unfair labor practices and of conducting a fair election by the use of traditional remedies is slight. Requiring the Respondent simply to refrain from unlawful conduct will not eradicate the lingering effects of the violations. Correspondingly, it is not likely that a third election would reliably reflect genuine, uncoerced employee sentiment. We conclude therefore that the employees' representational desires would, on balance, be better protected by the issuance of a bargaining order than by traditional remedies.[3]

Accordingly, we will order the Respondent to recognize and bargain with the Union, on request, as the exclusive collective-bargaining agent of the employees in the unit found appropriate and, if an understanding is reached, embody it in a written, signed agreement.[4]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Madison Industries, Inc., Los Angeles, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to recognize and bargain collectively in good faith with Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All metal building industry journeymen, apprentices, janitors, steel shop leadmen, finish line leadmen, and painters employed by the Employer at its facility located at 1900 East 64th Street, Los Angeles, California; excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Attempting to bypass and undermine the Union and deal directly with its employees by unilaterally presenting to the employees a contract proposal containing changes in the terms and conditions of their employment.

(c) Promising employees potentially improved benefits and terms and conditions of employment in the form of a written agreement if they vote to decertify the Union.

(d) Announcing to employees its intent to refuse to bargain in good faith with the Union if the Union is selected to represent the employees, by making statements to employees that no future contracts will be signed with the Union and indicating to employees that selecting the Union as their exclusive collective-bargaining representative is a futility.

(e) Threatening to close the plant if the employees vote for continued union representation.

(f) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, recognize and bargain collectively in good faith with Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit found above with respect to wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody it in a signed written agreement.

(b) Post at its facility in Los Angeles, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[5] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 21, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the election in Case 21–RD–2169 is set aside and the petition in that case is dismissed.

---

[3] Of course, this order does not lock in the Union as the bargaining representative. As the Supreme Court noted in Gissel, supra 395 U.S. at 615: "There is, after all, nothing permanent in a bargaining order, and, if, after the effects of the employer's acts have worn off, the employees clearly desire to disavow the union, they can do so by filing a representation petition."

[4] The General Counsel requests a visitatorial clause. We deny the General Counsel's request as unnecessary here. Cherokee Marine, 287 NLRB 1080 (1988).

[5] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain collectively in good faith with Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative for the employees in the following appropriate unit:

All metal building industry journeymen, apprentices, janitors, steel shop leadmen, finish line leadmen and painters employed by the Employer at its facility located at 1900 East 64th Street, Los Angeles, California; excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT attempt to bypass and undermine the Union and deal directly with our employees by unilaterally presenting to them a contract proposal containing changes in the terms and conditions of their employment.

WE WILL NOT promise our employees potentially improved benefits and terms and conditions of employment in the form of a written agreement if they vote to decertify the Union.

WE WILL NOT announce to employees our refusal to bargain with the Union if the Union is selected as their collective-bargaining representative by making statements to our employees that no future contracts will be signed with the Union or by indicating to them that selecting the Union as their exclusive collective-bargaining representative is a futility.

WE WILL NOT threaten to close the plant if our employees vote for continued union representation.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, recognize and bargain collectively in good faith with Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 108, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the appropriate unit set forth above, with respect to wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed written agreement.

MADISON INDUSTRIES, INC.

Mode O'Day Co. and Joanne D. Suffredini and General Warehousemen's Union, Local 598, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL-CIO,[1] Party to the Contract. Case 31-CA-15199

September 26, 1988

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On June 6, 1986, the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding[2] in which the Board adopted the administrative law judge's findings that the Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(2) and (1) of the Act by requiring Charging Party-employee Joanne D. Suffredini to execute a union-checkoff authorization on her first day of employment. The Board also adopted the judge's recommendation that the Respondent be ordered to reimburse Suffredini, with interest, all moneys deducted from her wages during the first 30 days of her employment by virtue of this invalid authorization. Thereafter, on December 23, 1986, the Board notified the parties that it had decided to reconsider its decision and the case was returned to the Board.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has decided to reaffirm its finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(2) and (1) by requiring Suffredini to execute the checkoff form, but to reverse its earlier determination that the Respondent must reimburse her for amounts deducted from her pay as initiation fees pursuant to that checkoff during the first 30 days of her employment. In so doing, we adhere to the long-established remedial approach expressed in Campbell Soup Co., 152 NLRB 1645 (1965), and do not rely on General Instrument Corp., 262 NLRB 1178 (1982), cited by the judge.

In Campbell Soup, as in the instant case, the employer and the union were parties to an agreement containing a lawful union-security clause requiring employees to become union members after 30 days of employment. The employer's practice was to advise newly hired employees that union membership was a condition of employment and to provide them immediately with union membership forms and dues-checkoff authorizations. This resulted invariably in the employees promptly signing the forms and the employer deducting initiation fees and dues as of their date of hire. The Board found that because this procedure unlawfully coerced employees to join the union and to make payments of dues and initiation fees sooner than they were required to do under the union-security clause, employees were entitled to have those amounts deducted as dues during the first 30 days refunded to them. This is so because no dues properly were owing during the 30-day grace period. However, the Board also determined that any moneys deducted during the first 30 days that were attributed toward the initiation fee did not have to be returned to employees who worked beyond the grace period and who would, therefore, have been liable for payment of the initiation fee. Only those individuals who did not work at least 30 days were entitled to have the prematurely deducted initiation fees refunded to them. This approach results in the parties being placed in the posture they would have been in had no unfair labor practices occurred; that is, those employees who retained employment beyond the grace period and became subject to the union-security provision did not have duly owed initiation fees returned to them; those employees who worked fewer than 30 days and never became liable for the initiation fee were refunded that money; and all employees who had dues—an incidence of membership—deducted from their wages during the 30-day grace period were given back those moneys.[3]

The evidence in this case, as the judge fully sets forth, shows that the Respondent coerced Suffredini to sign a checkoff authorization on her first day of work and to begin deducting installment payments toward the union initiation fee with her first paycheck. Over Suffredini's repeated protests, the Respondent continued to deduct $25 from each of her first 5 weeks' paychecks. Suffredini voluntarily left the Respondent's employ after approximately 6 weeks.[4] It is undisputed that the entire amount of these several deductions was applied toward the Union's $200 initiation fee and none was attributed to dues. Under the rule set forth in Campbell Soup, we find that because Suffredini worked beyond 30 days, albeit only a short time thereafter, she became subject to the requirements

[1] On November 1, 1987, the Teamsters International Union was readmitted to the AFL-CIO. Accordingly, the caption has been amended to reflect that change.

[2] 280 NLRB 253.

[3] Accord: Zidell Explorations, 175 NLRB 887 (1969); Electrical Workers IUE Local 60 (Westinghouse Electric), 180 NLRB 1062 (1970); Playskool, Inc., 205 NLRB 1009 (1973); Machinists Local 1198 (Interstate Food), 278 NLRB 154 (1986).

[4] There is no allegation or evidence that Suffredini's leaving her job was related in any way to these deductions or otherwise resulted from unlawful conduct by the Respondent.

best copy available

of the lawful union-security clause, including the payment of an initiation fee. Accordingly, contrary to the judge and the remedial scheme of General Instrument on which he relied,[5] we will not require the Respondent to reimburse Suffredini any part of the moneys withheld from her wages.[6] We shall issue a new order in lieu of the one previously entered in this proceeding.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Mode O'Day Company, Division of Wickes Companies, Inc., Burbank, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(b).

"(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

2. Delete paragraph 2(a) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER JOHANSEN, dissenting in part.

I agree with my colleagues that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(2) and (1) by requiring Charging Party Joanne D. Suffredini to execute a union-checkoff authorization on her first day of employment. Under the particular facts of this case, however, I cannot agree with the majority that the Respondent need not reimburse Suffredini for any initiation fees it deducted from her wages.

The majority finds that Suffredini is not entitled to reimbursement of initiation fees that the Respondent prematurely withheld from her paycheck because, under Campbell Soup Co., 152 NLRB 1645 (1965), and its progeny, Suffredini became liable for the fees once she had worked more than 30 days. Thus, according to the majority, by denying her reimbursement, they placed Suffredini "in the posture [she] would have been in had no unfair labor practices occurred." I disagree.

The Respondent informed Suffredini orally and in writing, in her interview for employment and on her first day of work, that she was required to belong to the Union, that there was a $200 union initiation fee payable by $25 weekly deductions from her paycheck, and that no deductions would begin for 30 days. Notwithstanding these representations, however, the Respondent immediately deducted $25 per week from the Suffredini's wages and continued to do so for 5 weeks until Suffredini informed the Respondent that she was resigning and asked that the deductions cease. Suffredini thereafter quit the Respondent's employ, some 6 weeks after her hire.

Under these facts, it is clear that had Suffredini not been coerced into prematurely signing the union-checkoff authorization card, she would not have had any moneys deducted from her paycheck until her 31st day of employment, and fewer deductions would have been made prior to her leaving the Respondent's employ. On this basis, in order to place Suffredini in the position she would have been in but for the Respondent's unfair labor practices, it is necessary to require the Respondent to reimburse her any amount over and above that which should have had deducted between her 31st day of employment and her resignation. In fashioning this remedy, I do not reject Campbell Soup, on which my colleagues rely, but find that its principles cannot be woodenly applied to deny reimbursement where, as here, initiation fees were payable by periodic installments and the discriminatee quits before the date when all installments would have been paid.

Contrary to my colleagues' assertions, the fact that Suffredini was liable for the entire $200 initiation fee on her 31st day of employment is not dispositive of the remedy issue in this case. Although Suffredini might have been required to tender the entire initiation fee after 30 days in the Respondent's employ, this was not the case. The Respond-

---

[5] In General Instrument, the Board ordered reimbursement of dues and initiation fees that had been deducted unlawfully. However, the precedent cited in that case for this remedy involved the unlawful deduction of dues only. Thus, to the extent that General Instrument can be read to authorize the reimbursement of unlawfully deducted initiation fees to employees who remain employed beyond the grace period, it is not supported by precedent and is at odds with the Board's well-recognized and accepted nonpunitive, make-whole status quo ante remedial policy.

[6] Had the first 30 days' deductions been apportioned between initiation fee and dues, that part attributable to the dues obligation would have properly been refunded to the Charging Party. See Interstate Food, supra at fn. 1.

Despite our dissenting colleague's assertions to the contrary, his partial reimbursement formula not only fails to follow Campbell Soup, but is tantamount to a repudiation of its essential underlying principle; that is, once employees work beyond the grace period provided for by the union-security agreement, they are liable for the full amount of the designated initiation fee. This is so irrespective of any installment payment plan that might exist. Periodic payments are merely a matter of convenience and serve to lessen the impact of full payment from one paycheck early in employment. The fact remains that once the 30 days is up the initiation fee is payable and the employee subject to that valid union-security requirement is not entitled to a refund of any part of that fee even if it was withheld prior to its having become due. This essentially was the situation in Campbell Soup and is the situation here; and the Respondent's reneging on its "assurances" to Suffredini that it would not make any deductions for the initiation fee during the first 30 days is relevant only to the question whether a violation occurred and not to the remedial issue addressed in Campbell Soup. In both cases it was improper for any deduction to be made prior to the 30-day grace period, but in both cases, once the 30-day grace period had passed, the entire amount was owed without regard to what had gone before. With respect to liability for the initiation fee, the employee was in the same position he or she would be in even if there had been no violation.

ent repeatedly assured Suffredini that no moneys would be deducted for 30 days, and then only in $25 weekly installments. To restore the status quo ante, Suffredini needs to be placed precisely in the position she would have been in but for the Respondent's unlawful conduct. By remunerating Suffredini for fees unlawfully extracted within the first 30 day, the status quo would be preserved.

Nor do I agree with the majority's claim that my position eviscerates the principles of Campbell Soup. As, admittedly, some of the prematurely withheld initiation fees in Campbell Soup were periodic payments, there was no evidence that, as here, the employer provided assurances that periodic payment would not begin for 30 days, or that discriminatees who were not reimbursed quit before the entire initiation fee was to be paid.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT contribute support or assistance to General Warehousemen's Union, Local 598, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, AFL–CIO, or any other labor organization, by encouraging or requiring newly hired employees to sign dues-checkoff authorizations in favor of that Union as part of our employment procedures.

WE WILL NOT deduct from the wages of our employees union initiation fees and dues in favor of the Union, or any other union, pursuant to any authorization not freely and voluntarily given by the employees in favor of the Union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

MODE O'DAY COMPANY, DIVISION OF WICKES COMPANIES, INC.

Venture Packaging, Inc. and Angela S. Enderby. Case 8–CA–19989

September 26, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On April 27, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Marvin Roth issued the attached decision. The General Counsel filed exceptions, a supporting brief, and a motion to consolidate.[1] The Respondent and the Glass, Pottery, Plastics and Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO–CLC, the Charging Party in the cases the General Counsel wishes to consolidate with this case, each filed an opposition to the motion to consolidate.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The recommended Order of the administrative law judge is adopted and the complaint is dismissed.

[1] The General Counsel's motion seeks to consolidate the present case with Cases 8–CA–19242, 8–CA–19371, and 8–CA–19438, all of which are presently pending before the Board. As the Charging Party and the issues in this case differ from those in the pending cases, and in the interest of expeditious resolution of this case, the General Counsel's motion is denied.

[2] The General Counsel has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

Frank D. Motil, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Frederick R. Post, Esq., of Toledo, Ohio, for the Respondent.
Joshua M. Spielberg, Esq., of Haddonfield, New Jersey, for the Charging Party in Cases 8–CA–20046 and 8–CA–20318.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MARVIN ROTH, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard at Sandusky, Ohio, on November 5 and 6, 1987.[1] The charge was filed on April 7 by Angela S. Enderby, an individual. The complaint, then consolidated with Cases 8–CA–20046 and 8–CA–20318, which issued as amended on October 20, 1987, alleges that Venture Packaging, Inc. (Respondent or the Company) violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act. The gravamen of the complaint, insofar as pertinent to Case 8–CA–19989, is that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) by discharging Enderby because of her union and protected concerted activities, and in order to discourage employees from engaging in such activity, and by unlawful interrogation. The Company's answer denies the commission of the alleged unfair labor practices. All parties were afforded full opportunity to participate, to present relevant evidence, to argue orally, and to file briefs. The General Counsel, the Company, and Glass, Pottery, Plastics and Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC (the Union), Charging Party in Cases 8–CA–20046 and 8–CA–20318, each filed a brief.

On the entire record in this case[2] and from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having considered the arguments of counsel and the briefs submitted, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

The Company, an Ohio corporation with an office and place of business in Monroeville, Ohio, is engaged in the manufacture of plastic food containers. In the course of its business, the Company annually ships from its Monroeville facility goods valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside Ohio. I find, as the Company admits, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

On August 8, 1986, following a Board-conducted election, the Board certified the Union as collective-bargaining representative of the Company's production and maintenance employees. The Company has refused to recognize and bargain with the Union. The Company contends that the election was invalid because "lead foremen," who the Company contends are supervisors under the Act, were permitted to vote in the election. On September 12, 1986, the General Counsel issued an amended consolidated complaint in Venture Packaging, Cases 8–CA–19242, 8–CA–19371, and 8–CA–19438, alleging that the Company was violating Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. The case was heard before Administrative Law Judge Lowell Goerlich on November 12 to 15 and January 6 to 8. On June 17, 1987, Judge Goerlich issued his decision and recommended Order, [1] All dates are for the period May 1, 1986, through April 30, 1987, unless otherwise indicated.

[2] Certain errors in the transcript are noted and corrected.

finding and concluding that the Company violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5). Judge Goerlich found in sum that: the Company, and in particular its president, John Rathbun, was strongly and bitterly opposed to the Union; the Company unlawfully failed and refused to recognize and bargain with the Union; the Company made numerous unilateral changes in violation of its bargaining obligations with the Union, and also in reprisal for the employees' union activity or to undermine the Union's position; the Company constructively discharged an employee because of her union activity; and the Company committed other violations of Section 8(a)(1). The Company, the Union, and the General Counsel filed exceptions to Judge Goerlich's decision, and the case is presently pending before the Board. At the present hearing I granted summary judgment in favor of the General Counsel on the allegations in Cases 8–CA–20046 and 8–CA–20318, all of which, as amended, involved alleged violations of the Company's bargaining obligations. I further directed that the Enderby case (8–CA–19989) be severed from the other cases for decision and further processing before the Board. On January 29, 1988, I issued a decision and recommended Order in Cases 8–CA–20046 and 8–CA–20318. All parties filed exceptions and those cases are presently pending before the Board. However, the parties did not except to severance of the Enderby case.

B. Alleged Interrogation and Discharge of Angela Enderby

Angela Enderby began working for the Company on November 11 as an office clerical employee, a nonunit position. The Company terminated Enderby on February 10, at the end of her 90-day probationary period. The General Counsel contends that the Company discharged Enderby "because of [its] perception that in the event of a strike, they could not count on Enderby's loyalty, and, in particular, that they could not count on Enderby being willing to work behind the picket line during such a strike." (Br. 19.) Before discussing the events of Enderby's tenure, I shall first discuss a telephone conversation between Enderby and Company President Rathbun, which took place shortly after her discharge. If the General Counsel has presented a prima facie case, then such case necessarily rests on that conversation. As will be discussed, that conversation constitutes virtually the only credible evidence that might indicate that Enderby was discriminatorily discharged.

Enderby testified in sum as follows: After her discharge she telephoned the Company and tried to speak to John Rathbun's son. He was not in so she spoke to John himself. Enderby asked if Rathbun knew that she was let go, and he answered that he heard about it. Enderby argued that it was not fair because she was not allowed to try to do the work. Rathbun responded by offering to give Enderby "a little advice," namely: "The next time you get a job at a place that is having as many union problems as we are, don't go shooting your mouth off about how you will not cross a picket line, and what a big union man your husband is." Enderby denied saying this. She explained that she said she would be afraid to cross a picket line alone, but if necessary, could work in the printing department. This was the substance of their conversation. Rathbun, who was called as a General Counsel witness, did not deny having the conversation, although his version differed slightly from that of Enderby. Rathbun testified in sum as follows: Enderby asked him if he knew what happened. He said that he understood she was no longer with the Company. Enderby said that she wanted to tell her side, that the Company was not fair, that she did a good job, and could not understand why the Company thought otherwise. Rathbun answered that he did not know anything about it, was not familiar with her work, and could not help her. Enderby asked what Rathbun thought of her as a person, or whether he had anything against her. Rathbun answered: "The only thing I've ever heard that disappointed me a little bit, was the fact that you made the statement in front of the whole office, after you started to work, that you understood that this company had a lot of union problems, and that you would never come across a union picket line . . . if you ever have another job, don't volunteer that kind of information, because if you don't tell people, and they never have a strike, you never have to say whether you will or not. That's the only thing that I think you did here that, you know, didn't impress me." Rathbun explained that "You supposedly made the statement to the people upstairs that your husband was very strong for unions, and you would never cross a picket line, no matter what." Enderby responded that Rathbun misunderstood her, and that she meant only that she was afraid to cross a picket line. Rathbun testified that early in Enderby's employment he learned of her remark from his wife, who worked in the office, and who told him that Enderby told some of the office personnel that she would never cross a picket line. Rathbun testified that the remark did not bother him, but that he did not think it was smart of Enderby to say it. Rathbun further testified that he did not discuss Enderby's remark with comptroller Brett Bauer, who discharged Enderby, that he was not familiar with her work performance, and that he was not involved in Bauer's decision to terminate her. It is undisputed that Rathbun was out of town at the time of Enderby's termination. Rathbun further testified that he told Enderby that in his opinion, part of the problem was that the work really called for a college graduate, i.e., an accountant, although Bauer disagreed.

Enderby testified that when she began her job, comptroller Bauer asked her how she would feel about crossing a picket line. She answered: "Why? Is there going to be a strike?" Bauer responded that he did not know, and just wanted to know how she felt about it. Enderby said she would probably be afraid, and asked if there was a way into work other than the main driveway. Bauer said there was not. One of them said that they would worry about it when the time came, and Bauer resumed teaching her the work. Enderby further testified about a conversation during the first week of her employment with accounting clerk Susan Bellard, with whom she was assigned to work. Enderby mentioned that her husband injured his back while working for the railroad. Bellard asked if he needed a lawyer. Enderby answered that he got one through his union. Shortly thereafter, Bellard asked Enderby if her husband would let her cross a picket line if there were a strike. Enderby answered that he would not want her to work behind a picket line and that she would be afraid to cross a picket line, but that if necessary she could work in the printing department. Bauer testified that in late November there were rumors in the plant of a strike. He told Enderby and Bellard that he did not think there would be a strike, but if it occurred, he would try to notify them at home and would provide safe transportation across the picket line. Bauer testified that there were no questions or comments. Bellard, who was also presented as a company witness, corroborated Bauer's testimony. She testified that he did not ask them any questions, but that after he left, Enderby said that she did not know whether she would cross a picket line. Bellard told her not to worry about it because "the guys will make sure we get in safely." Bellard testified that this was their only conversation about the matter. She testified that she did not tell either Rathbun or his wife about the conversation but that she did tell Deborah Iscman, another office employee. Iscman was presented as a company witness, but was not asked about the matter.

Other than Rathbun, who was called as an adverse witness, Enderby was the General Counsel's only witness. Enderby did not impress me as a credible witness. She was argumentative. Enderby displayed a tendency to ramble on, giving answers to questions not asked, injecting her alleged subjective feelings or hearsay concerning statements by other employees, and to avoid direct answers to questions on cross-examination. Enderby's testimony was in certain respects contradicted by her own writings. Enderby testified that when hired she was not given a copy of the Company's personnel policy manual. Subsequently she asked Susan Bellard about employee fringe benefits. According to Enderby, about 15 minutes later comptroller Bauer came into her office and threw a copy of the manual on her desk, saying that the Company did not have a manual pertaining to the office and "this is strictly for the plant, but I hope this clears things up." Bauer, in his testimony, denied that alleged incident occurred. Bauer testified in sum that in accordance with usual company procedure, he gave Enderby a copy of the manual when she was hired, that most of the manual provisions pertain to both office and plant personnel, and that he explained some of the provisions to Enderby and told her to read the manual. Bellard testified that employees were normally given a copy of the manual within 1 or 2 days of starting employment. Enderby's personnel file contains a form acknowledgment, dated November 14 and signed by Enderby, indicating that she received a copy of the manual and was responsible for familiarizing herself with the rules and regulations in the manual. If Enderby received the manual in the manner she described, there would be no such acknowledgment in the file. The manual, which was introduced in evidence, contains provisions that obviously or expressly pertain to both office and plant personnel, e.g., hospitalization and life insurance coverage (Enderby signed a waiver of coverage).

A major factual issue presented in this case was whether Bellard trained Enderby to do invoicing, which was one of Bellard's normal tasks. Enderby testified in sum that after their conversation about a picket line, Bellard kept putting off training on invoices and never trained Enderby to do that work. According to Enderby, about February 1 Bellard gave her incomplete written instructions on invoicing, but told her that she did not want Enderby doing invoices. Enderby testified that Bellard said she might do something else, like "terminations," thereby inferring that Bellard had advance knowledge that Enderby would be terminated. Documents presented in evidence, including entries in Enderby's handwriting, confirmed Bellard's testimony to the effect that she gave Enderby adequate training on invoicing. The Company presented in evidence four pages of notes, which Enderby admitted that she wrote while watching Bellard show her invoicing. The notes pertain to computer input, which is the last phase of the work. It is unlikely that Bellard would have taught Bellard this phase of invoicing without first showing her the preparation, which is the bulk of the work. The Company also presented in evidence extensive written information and instructions on preparation for invoicing. Enderby in her testimony reluctantly admitted having seen at least some of the written material, which includes her own marginal notes. Enderby testified that the written material contained a directive to ask Bellard about something. However, the material in evidence contains no such entry. I also have a problem with Enderby's version of her conversation with President Rathbun. Even if the Company were discriminatorily motivated, it is unlikely that Rathbun would have ignored Enderby's defense of her work, and proceeded directly to the matter of picket lines. Rathbun probably would have made at least a token reference to the Company's professed reason for her discharge.

I have no comparable reservations regarding the testimony of the other witnesses. (I have taken into consideration the fact that in the first unfair labor practice proceeding, Judge Goerlich did not credit the testimony of Rathbun and Bauer in certain respects.) I credit Rathbun's version of his conversation with Enderby. Unless otherwise indicated, I do not credit Enderby's testimony when it conflicts with that of the other witnesses. As I do not credit Enderby's testimony that Bauer asked her how she would feel about crossing a picket line, it follows that I am recommending that the complaint allegation of unlawful interrogation be dismissed.

The Company's answer asserts that Enderby "was discharged for just cause based on her inability to perform her assigned job duties, her attendance and tardiness problems and other legitimate nondiscriminatory business reasons."

Comptroller Bauer testified in sum as follows: The Company employed an accountant (Kim Wood) in its office. She left in September 1986. Bauer, himself a CPA, felt that he had developed enough experience in running the financial end of the business to dispense with any need for another accountant (Bauer became comptroller in August 1985). However, as the Company was growing, he felt that he needed another clerical employee in the accounting office. President Rathbun felt that the Company still needed another accountant, but he let Bauer have his way. Bauer placed a blind newspaper ad to screen applicants (I do not regard this fact as demonstrating that the Company sought to screen out union adherents). Enderby responded to the ad. Bauer interviewed and hired her. Bauer planned that Enderby would prepare the payroll and assist Bellard with invoicing. He anticipated that Enderby would normally spend all day Monday and about 2 hours on Tuesday preparing the payroll. She would spend the rest of the week working with Bellard on invoicing. By learning to do the invoicing, Enderby could back up Bellard, doing the work in her absence and enabling her to perform other tasks. Bauer emphasized to Enderby that it was important for her to be at work on Mondays in order that payroll preparation proceed on schedule so that paychecks could be distributed on Thursday without a last-minute rush. Bellard, a nonsupervisory employee, was primarily responsible for training Enderby. Bauer supervised both, although he followed a practice of minimal involvement in their day-to-day work. Bauer anticipated that he would evaluate Enderby's performance at the end of her 90-day probationary period, which he regarded as an adequate period of time to enable her to learn and perform the work. From time to time Bauer asked Bellard how Enderby was doing. Bellard invariably answered that Enderby was not picking up the work fast, but they should give her more time and she probably would come around. By the 60th day of Enderby's employment, Bauer was concerned. He pressed Bellard for more information. Bellard admitted that Enderby had trouble doing the work, and had made several serious errors in preparing billings. Bauer also learned from Bellard and Deborah Iscman that when Bellard was absent from work, Enderby failed to perform work assigned to her and left early or wasted time when there was work to be done, thereby leaving the work for others. Bauer also checked Enderby's timecards, and concluded that her absences were excessive. Her total record indicated that she was absent 6-1/2 days, left early on 4 days, and was late 1 day. However, Bauer regarded as most significant that she was absent or left early on 5 of 13 Mondays during her tenure. Bauer did not compare her record with that of other past or present office employees. However, he did not recall any such attendance problems with other employees, and the Company's records confirm his opinion. (In light of Bauer's testimony, I do not regard his failure to compare Enderby's attendance record with those of other employees as demonstrating a discriminatory motive.)

Bauer testified that at the beginning of February he tentatively decided to terminate Enderby at the end of her probationary period. On Monday, February 9, Enderby called to say that she would not come in to work because of snow conditions. By noon the roads were cleared, but Enderby did not come in at all that day. (Enderby in her testimony never explained why she could not come in for the afternoon.) Bauer then made a firm decision to terminate her. The next day Bauer told Enderby that she was not progressing well, not performing the work in a timely fashion, and that her attendance contributed to, but was not the main reason for, her termination. Bauer testified that although pressed by Enderby, he did not go into detail because he saw no need to humiliate her. For the first time, Enderby told Bauer that she was not given an opportunity to do invoicing. Bauer testified in sum that he terminated Enderby because of her poor performance, that the decision was his own, and that he did not consult with Rathbun before terminating her. Subsequently Bauer assigned another employee to prepare the payroll. The employee did not perform well, and was also terminated. Eventually Bauer assigned Bellard to prepare the payroll, and he found no need for another employee.

Ballard and Iscman corroborated Bauer's testimony concerning Enderby's poor performance. Bellard testified in sum that Enderby was very slow in performing the work, had difficulty in catching on how to do it, and failed to perform work assigned to her when Bellard was absent. As a result Bellard fell behind on her own work. Bellard felt sorry for Enderby (whose husband was not working) and tried to teach her. About February 1 Bauer asked Bellard how Enderby was doing. As usual Bellard said that Enderby was very slow, but they could work around it. Bauer asked whether Enderby could back her up if something happened. Bellard conceded that she could not.

I find that Enderby's conversations with Bellard concerning Enderby's husband and the impact of a picket line made their way through the office grapevine, among the clericals, to Rathbun's wife, and then to Rathbun, reaching him in a disturbed and exaggerated version. The evidence indicates that such gossip spread quickly around the plant, and was not always accurate, e.g., the rumors of a strike. Rathbun's statements to Enderby were at least arguably unlawful in that they could reasonably be interpreted as a threat that the Company would not hire an employee who volunteered that he or she would not cross a union picket line. However, the General Counsel does not allege the statements themselves as an unfair labor practice. Rather, the General Counsel contends that the statements demonstrate that the Company discharged Enderby because they were not sure she would work behind a picket line. I find that the General Counsel presented a prima facie case, in that Rathbun's remarks were susceptible of an interpretation that Enderby was discharged at least in part because she indicated that she might not cross a picket line in the event of a strike at the plant.[8] However, on the basis of all the evidence, I find that the Company has met its burden of proving that it would have discharged Enderby in the absence of her protected activity, and specifically that Enderby was discharged because of poor job performance during her probationary period, and not for discriminatory reasons. First, the evidence indicates that [8] Enderby's comments to Bellard constituted protected activity under Sec. 7 of the Act. See United States Steel Corp. v. NLRB, 711 F.2d 772, 775–776 (7th Cir. 1983). If the Company discharged Enderby because of her comments or because of Rathbun's interpretation of her comments, i.e., that she would show support for a strike, then her discharge would be unlawful.

Rathbun was not involved in her discharge. Rathbun left the hiring and firing of accounting department personnel to comptroller Bauer. Rathbun so demonstrated when he permitted Bauer to hire a clerical employee notwithstanding his own view that that job required an accountant. Rathbun had no knowledge of Enderby's job performance and was not even around when she was discharged. Rathbun expressed his opinions to Enderby in strong terms, and probably in an unlawful manner, but he did not tell Enderby that she was fired for this reason, or suggest that he was involved in her termination. Second, the evidence indicates that by the end of the first week of Enderby's employment, the Company knew all that it would ever know about her views concerning picketing, strikes, or other union activity. Indeed, Enderby testified that during her job interview she told Bauer that her husband was a union member. If the Company were discriminatorily motivated against Enderby, then it probably would have discharged her in November, or at the earliest possible opportunity. Enderby's poor work performance provided the Company with ample opportunities to terminate her, if it were seeking a pretext. Nevertheless the Company kept her on until the end of her probationary period.

In an effort to explain away this factor, the General Counsel advanced the theory that after the first week of her employment, the Company kept Enderby on for nearly 3 months, doing little or no useful work, and without giving her adequate training, all in order to provide an excuse for terminating her in February. The General Counsel's theory also rests on the premise that accounting clerk Bellard, although a nonsupervisory employee, acted as the Company's union-busting agent in the office by deliberately sabotaging Enderby's career. (The complaint does not allege that Bellard was a company agent.) The theory fails on the facts. The credible evidence indicates that Bellard was sympathetic to Enderby, that she tried to train her, that Enderby was given adequate training, and that the Company gave her the benefit of the doubt by retaining her through her entire probationary period in order to permit her to demonstrate an ability and willingness to perform the work. Therefore the factors of timing and the Company's overall course of conduct toward Enderby weigh against finding a discriminatory motive. Third, Enderby's job performance, including her attendance, did not measure up to the Company's standards. Enderby demonstrated her own indifference by failing to show up at all to work on February 9, although she knew how important it was for her to be at work on Mondays. After her termination, Bauer tried unsuccessfully to employ another person to do the work, and then simply dispensed with the idea by assigning Bellard extra duties (which she performed). I have taken into consideration the Company's animus toward unionization, the unlawful conduct as documented by Judge Goerlich, and my own findings in the severed cases.[4] However, I find for the reasons discussed that the Company did not violate the Act by discharging Enderby.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The Company has not violated the Act as alleged in Case 8–CA–19989.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[5]

ORDER

The complaint in Case 8–CA–19989 is dismissed.

---

[4] As indicated, Judge Goerlich's decision is still pending on exceptions filed with the Board. In the absence of a Board decision, I have accorded a presumption of validity to Judge Goerlich's credibility resolutions and findings of operative fact. See Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474, 494 (1951).

[5] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

West Point Pepperell, Inc. and Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing, and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC. Case 1–CA–25192

September 26, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On June 23, 1988, Administrative Law Judge Michael O. Miller issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, West Point Pepperell, Inc., Biddeford, Maine, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraphs 1(a) and (b).

"(a) Failing and refusing to timely furnish Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC, with requested information that is relevant and necessary to the performance by the Union of its obligations as statutory bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees.

"(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC, as the exclusive representative of our employees in the appropriate unit by failing and refusing, on request, to timely furnish it with information relevant and necessary to the performance of its obligations as collective-bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL furnish Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC as exclusive representative to all employees in the appropriate unit, the information that it requested in the grievances filed on May 21, 1987, and September 2, 1987, and in its letter of October 6, 1987, to wit: the names and average piece rate earnings of each of the employees working on piece rate, in each group, on a monthly basis.

WEST POINT PEPPERELL, INC.

Don Firenze, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Rodger W. Lehr Jr., Esq. (Herbert H. Bennett & Associates, P.A.), of Portland, Maine, for the Respondent.
Ralph Oliver, Manager, of Biddeford, Maine, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MICHAEL O. MILLER, Administrative Law judge. This matter was tried before me at Boston, Massachusetts, on May 3, 1988, based on a charge filed by Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC (the Union), on December 30, 1987, as amended on January 26, 1988, and a complaint issued by the Regional Director of Region 1 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board), on February 24, 1988. The complaint alleged that West Point Pepperell, Inc. (Respondent), violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act), by refusing to supply the Union with requested information relevant to the [1] We agree with the judge that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing the Union's request for the names and average earnings records of piece rate employees on a monthly basis. Because we agree with the judge that the Union had legitimate reasons for its information request, we find it unnecessary to pass on the judge's alternative finding that even if the Union sought this information for the same reasons that the binders had previously sought weekly posting of individual earning averages (i.e., to embarrass the high producers), a conclusion of bad faith would not be warranted. We also do not rely on the judge's discussion of Scofield v. NLRB, 394 U.S. 423 (1969), and 393 F.2d 49 (7th Cir. 1968).

[2] The judge inadvertently misstated the Union's name in his recommended Order and notice. We shall modify the Order and issue a new notice to correct these errors. We shall also modify the judge's narrow cease-and-desist language to conform to that customarily used by the Board.

Union's performance as exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees. Respondent's timely filed answer denied the commission of any unfair labor practice.

All parties were afforded full opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses, argue orally, and submit briefs. Counsel for the General Counsel's oral argument and Respondent's brief have been carefully considered.

Based on the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE RESPONDENT'S BUSINESS AND THE UNION'S LABOR ORGANIZATION STATUS—PRELIMINARY CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Respondent is a corporation with an office and place of business in Biddeford, Maine, where it is engaged in the manufacture and sale of blankets, comforters, and related products. Jurisdiction is not in dispute. The complaint alleges and Respondent has admitted facts sufficient to establish jurisdiction. I therefore find and conclude that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

The complaint alleges, Respondent has admitted, and I find and conclude that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

A. Collective-Bargaining History

The Union has represented Respondent's employees in the following collective-bargaining unit, admitted to be appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act, since the early 1940s:

> All production and maintenance employees employed at the Biddeford facility but excluding all executives, managers, general superintendents, general foremen, office clerical employees, laboratory employees, firemen, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

Respondent's recognition of the Union has been embodied in a series of collective-bargaining agreements, the most recent of which is effective for the period of June 16, 1986, to June 18, 1989.

There are approximately 275 employees in the unit; about 75 percent of these, including those in the binder category, work on piece rates.

In 1982, in settlement of a grievance over the downward adjustment of certain piece rates, and to remedy what Respondent saw as a problem of "runaway" piece rates, Respondent and the Union entered into an agreement, supplementing their then-current contract. That settlement provided, inter alia:

> 1. All piece rates shall be set to yield expected earnings of 120% of average standard guaranteed base rates.
>
> 2. Whenever group monthly average earnings for any job classification equal or exceed 130% of the standard guaranteed base rate, the COMPANY shall have the right to reduce the piece rates for that job classification to yield a group average of 125% of the standard guaranteed base rate for that classification. Such downward adjustments in piece rates shall be made without the necessity of time studies.
>
> 3. THE COMPANY shall supply the UNION with monthly reports on the group average earnings, as a percentage of standard guaranteed base rates, for all piece rate job classifications, exclusive of Learners.

The foregoing provisions have been embodied in each subsequent contract and are set forth in the current agreement as articles 9.4, 9.6, and 9.7 respectively.

The information that the Respondent supplies to the Union each month pursuant to article 9.7 of the contract provides the group piece rate averages, specifically the amount by which the group has exceeded the hourly rate, for each month. Respondent does not regularly supply the Union with the piece rate averages of any of the individuals in the group.

B. The Dispute

1. Background

During 1986, Respondent made two downward adjustments in the binder's piece rates, pursuant to article 9.6 of the contract, when the monthly averages for that group exceeded 130 percent of the standard. On January 9, 1987,[1] 27 binders signed a grievance (grievance 1, G.C. Exh. 8) requesting that the Employer post the incentive earnings over base rate of each of the binders on a weekly basis. As the employees told Ralph Oliver, the Union's business manager, "they were sick and tired of being cut . . . they want to know who . . . was making the high or causing the . . . rate to be inflated . . . some of them felt they didn't know how they were doing it. To them, it felt impossible . . . . They wanted to know who was the cause of the [downward] adjustments in the rates . . . creating the problem." Binder and Union Shop Steward Joanne Dusseault similarly explained that the binders were "tired of being cut," i.e., of having their rates adjusted downward. Weekly posting, the binders believed, would embarrass those who were the cause of the downward adjustments, the highest producers, and cause them to be "very careful."[2]

A second-step grievance meeting was held on February 19 regarding grievance 1. At that time, Dusseault explained

---

[1] All dates hereinafter are 1987 unless otherwise specified.

[2] Both Oliver and Dusseault testified that even without postings, the employees in the department knew who the fastest workers were.

> Four of twenty-two binders are exceeding one hundred and thirty percent. They are affecting the slower operators . . . that have to work that much harder. Pretty soon . . . we will all have tendonitis. All binders agree to posting . . . . If posted, the ones over a hundred and thirty percent said they'd slow down.

She denied that the intent was to pressure those higher producers but acknowledged that something akin to embarrassment would help prevent further downward adjustments.

Respondent refused to post the individual averages on a weekly basis. However, on March 17, in response to grievance 1, it furnished the Union with the average earnings deviation for each of the binders, by name and number, for the 13-week quarter ending on December 28, 1986, and the 4-week period ending February 22, 1987. The Union is not pursuing the demand for weekly posting of individual averages.

2. The current information requests

On May 21 the Union filed grievance 8, alleging that the Respondent had failed to include five low-producing binders in calculating the group averages that resulted in the downward adjustments of June 23, 1986 (4.09 percent) and December 29, 1986 (3.98 percent). It sought restoration of the rates and backpay. Additionally, it sought the following, which is the basis for the instant charge and complaint:

> The Union is also requesting . . . the names and the average piece rate earnings of each individual employee that's on piecework, in each group, be submitted on a monthly basis to the Union in order for the Union to calculate the average earning accurately and to assure that no employee was omitted from the group.

Respondent denied the grievance, asserting that all the appropriate employees had been included in the group. Only learners, those employees not achieving base rate, had been excluded, it stated. (The issue of who is a learner is now pending arbitration.) Respondent further rejected the Union's demand for monthly lists of the incentive earnings of all employees by named individuals, asserting that it was providing all the information required by the contract. Respondent did, however, furnish the Union with the average piece rate earnings of the binders for the 4-week periods preceding each of the downward adjustments. It agrees now that it will furnish such information each time there is a downward adjustment.

On September 2 and October 6 the Union reiterated its demand for monthly listings of the average piece rate earnings of all employees working on incentive. The Respondent rejected both requests, insisting that it will only provide the information required by contract. As noted, the Employer has also agreed to furnish individual earnings information of the employees in affected departments subsequent to any downward adjustments.

Respondent's personnel director, Carl Frechette, testified that it is to the Employer's economic benefit to have fewer employees working faster and producing more pieces per individual than to have a greater number of employees working more slowly, even if the hourly earnings of both groups are the same. The savings, he claimed, is in fringe benefits.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

The General Counsel correctly asserts, and Respondent does not dispute, that the information requested by the Union, the names of the unit employees performing work on piece rate and their incentive earnings averages, is wage data that is presumptively relevant and generally must be furnished to the Union on request. That principle is too well established to be argued again. See, for example, WCCO Radio v. NLRB, 844 F.2d 511 (8th Cir. 1988); Oil Workers Local 6-418 v. NLRB, 711 F.2d 348 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, 603 F.2d 1310, 1315 (8th Cir. 1979); and Whitin Machine Works, 108 NLRB 1537 (1954). The General Counsel further correctly asserts, and Respondent does not appear to dispute, that a union does not waive its statutory right to such information by agreeing to a contract providing that the employer will furnish something less. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 247 NLRB 171 (1980); General Electric Co., 173 NLRB 164 (1968). A waiver of a statutory right must be "clear and unmistakable." Metropolitan Edison Co. v. NLRB, 460 U.S. 698 (1983); Univis, Inc., 169 NLRB 37, 39 (1968).

Respondent contends, however, that the Union's right to such information is not absolute. Information sought in bad faith, for the purpose of harassing the employer or employees, it argues, need not be furnished. NLRB v. A. S. Abell, 624 F.2d 506 (4th Cir. 1980), denying enf. 230 NLRB 112 (1977); Boston Herald-Traveler Corp. v. NLRB, 223 F.2d 58 (1st Cir. 1955); Whitin Machine Works, supra. In this case, Respondent, on whom the burden of proof on this issue falls,[3] argues that the facts establish that the Union sought the piece rate earnings of the individual employees for a bad-faith purpose, to effect a slowdown and prevent future downward adjustments of piece rates. Such bad faith on the part of the Union, Respondent asserts, legitimizes its insistence that it will only furnish the group averages on a monthly basis, as required by contract, and provided information about individual earning averages after it imposes a downward adjustment. The record does not support Respondent's contention that the Union's request was made in bad faith.

Respondent's defense is premised on statements about why the employees in the binder classification filed grievance 1, seeking weekly posting of individual earning averages, e.g., to embarrass the high producers into restricting their productivity. The request for weekly posting, however, was dropped and those statements carry significantly less weight now. The Union presently seeks only that Respondent furnish it with the monthly averages, identified by individuals. Oliver explained that he sought that information "to calculate the average earning accurately and to ensure that no employees was omitted from the group." Where, as here, the Respondent has previously made downward adjustments in the piece rates that were based on questionable assumptions (the alleged exclusion of certain low-producing binders from the group), the Union need not await the next such downward adjustment to question the Employer's calculations and assumptions. It is entitled to seek to avoid, not merely prosecute, grievances. The Union has thus proffered credible and valid reasons for its pending information requests; no inference of bad faith is warranted from the employees' earlier voiced reasons for wanting the averages publicly posted.

[3] See Washington Gas Light Co., 273 NLRB 116 (1984); Pfizer, Inc., 268 NLRB 916 (1984).

Even if one were to assume that the Union sought this information for the same reasons that the binders had sought weekly posting, however, a conclusion of bad faith would not be warranted. Unions have traditionally opposed or sought to impose ceilings on piecework for a variety of reasons related to the obligation to promote the welfare of the greater number of their members. Such reasons include fears that the employees will work themselves out of their jobs by overproduction, that (as here) higher productivity will result in lowered rates and compensation for actual production, that there will be morale-threatening jealousies, and (again as here) that the higher pace required to maintain earnings might threaten the employees' health. Scofield v. NLRB, 393 F.2d 49, 53 (7th Cir. 1968). These are legitimate union interests that contravene no national policy or statutory scheme. Scofield v. NLRB, 394 U.S. 423, 436 (1969). Moreover, while Respondent alludes to the prohibition of slowdowns set forth in the contract's no-strike clause (art. 25) as evidencing a bad-faith motive here, Scofield teaches that a ceiling on piecework is not necessarily a slowdown as that term is used in the context of a strike or partial strike. I note that neither the Union nor the employees sought the information to bring about a "slowdown" as a means of adjusting a "dispute, difference or grievance," the conduct prohibited by the no-strike clause. I note further that the Union has expressly sought the information for legitimate purposes and it is only Respondent's surmise, from an earlier request, that the Union's intention is to cause a "slowdown."

In the instant case, the Union requested presumptively relevant wage data and supported that request with legitimate explanations of its need for that information. Respondent rejected that request, asserting a fear that the information would be used to its disadvantage, the slowing down of production by a few of its highest producers. That fear, while not mandated by the record, was not totally unreasonable or unwarranted and the interest Respondent sought to protect, higher production, was legitimate. Respondent's rejection of the Union's request, moreover, was not absolute. Respondent conditionally offered to disclose the information after any downward adjustment in rates, rather than on a regular monthly basis as requested by the Union. Thus, even with Respondent's "bad faith" contention rejected, there remains the question of whether Respondent's conditional offer satisfied its statutory obligations. In Detroit Edison v. NLRB, 440 U.S. 301, 314–315 (1979), the Supreme Court, faced with substantial confidentiality concerns held, with respect to one class of requested information (aptitude tests and answers), that both the duty to supply information and the type of disclosure required to satisfy that duty turned on "circumstances of the particular case." With respect to a second class of information, clearly confidential test scores, it stated at 318

> The Board's position [requiring the employer to furnish the inofrmation] appears to rest on the proposition that union interests in arguably relevant information must always predominate over all other interest, however legitimate. But such an absolute rule has never been established, and we decline to adopt such a rule here. There are situations in which an employer's conditional offer to disclose may be warranted.

The Court required the Board to balance the Union's need for information against "any legitimate and substantial" confidentiality interests established by the employer, accommodating the parties' respective interests insofar as feasible in determining the employer's duty to supply the information." Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 261 NLRB 27, 30 (1982).

Assuming, arguendo, the applicability of the Detroit Edison balancing test to information requests that do not involve confidentiality,[4] I cannot conclude that Respondent's conditional offer to furnish individual earnings averages only after there has been a downward adjustment satisfies its statutory obligations. First, I note that the Union, by requesting that the information be furnished on a monthly basis, seeks to avoid grievances, a salutary objective. If the Respondent's position here were to prevail, the employees could be subject to reductions in their piece rates which, although ultimately reversed, would cause them to earn less or work faster to maintain their prior earnings. This, in turn, could exacerbate tensions in the workplace, lower morale, and expose those employees to unnecessary physical injury. Even a subsequent reduction in the rates and the payment of backpay after successful prosecution of a grievance might not fully restore the status quo ante. Second, Respondent's proposed compromise would not necessarily achieve its stated objective. As the General Counsel's witnesses pointed out, the employees know, at least generally, who the highest producers are. If they desire to cause those employees to "slow down," they can "embarrass" or "harass" them as well without the records or on the basis of records furnished after an adjustment, as they can on the basis of records furnished on a regular monthly basis. Third, Respondent only surmises that the information might be used to reduce productivity; that is not evident from the current requests or any impermissible conduct described in this record. These latter two points convince me that Respondent's concerns, while legitimate, are not substantial. (Cf. Detroit Edison, supra.)

[4] Compare New Jersey Bell Telephone Co. v. NLRB, 720 F.2d 789 (3d Cir. 1983), and Washington Gas Light Co., 273 NLRB 116 (1984), with E. W. Buschman Co., 277 NLRB 189 (1985); Carpenters Local 608 (Various Employers), 279 NLRB 747 (1986); and Roadway Express, 275 NLRB 1107, 1110 (1985).

Finally, it takes no great leap of the imagination to see that the regular receipt of individual earnings records might enable the Union to discern patterns or trends from which it might formulate new bargaining proposals, a purpose implicit in any request for wage data. The Union might, for example, notice a wide disparity in earnings over an extended period of time and seek an adjustment in the rates, reassignment of employees, or greater training. It might conclude and propose that the use of the median, rather than the average, as the basis for a rate adjustment, would better protect the majority of its unit members. It might bargain for a different definition of learner. The irregular receipt of the earnings records might arguably be insufficient for these valid bargaining purposes.

Accordingly, I must conclude that by refusing the Union's request for the average earnings records, naming individual employees, on a monthly basis, Respondent has failed to fulfill its statutory bargaining obligation, in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. By failing and refusing to timely furnish the Union with the records and information it requested, which are relevant and necessary to the performance of the Union's duties as statutory bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in an appropriate collective-bargaining unit, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

2. The unfair labor practices set forth in paragraph 1, above, affects commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) as set forth above, I recommend that it be required to cease and desist from such conduct or related conduct. Affirmatively, in order to effectuate the policies of the Act, I recommend that Respondent be required to furnish the Union with the names and average piece rate earnings of each of the employees working on piece rates in each group each month.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law, I issue the following recommended[5]

ORDER

Respondent, West Point Pepperell, Inc., Biddeford, Maine, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to timely furnish Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union of America, AFL–CIO, CLC with requested information that is relevant and necessary to the performance by the Union of its obligations as statutory bargaining representative of Respondent's employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with the efforts of the Union to bargain collectively with it on behalf of the employees in the appropriate unit.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Furnish Local 305T, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC as exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit, the following information heretofore requested by the Union: the names and average piece rate earnings of each of the employees in each group who work on piece rates, on a monthly basis, as requested in grievance 8, dated May 21, 1987, grievance 13, dated September 2, 1987, and its letter of October 6, 1987.

(b) Post at its plant in Biddeford, Maine, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[6] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

---

[5] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[6] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Accurate Die Casting Company and its Alter Ego, Accurate Die Casting Company, Debtor-in-Possession and Local 491, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America. Cases 3–CA–13434, 3–CA–13646, 3–CA–13832, 3–CA–13902, 3–CA–13954, 3–CA–14124, and 3–CA–14253

September 26, 1988

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN STEPHENS AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On December 30, 1987, the Regional Director issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing alleging that the Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), (4), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act.[1] On January 15, 1988, the Respondents filed an answer to this complaint. On January 21, 1988, the Regional Director issued an order further consolidating cases, amended consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing, which alleged additional violations of the Act to those alleged in the prior complaint.[2] On February 25, 1988, the Respondents filed an amended answer to the amended consolidated complaint. On April 26, 1988, the Regional Director issued an order further consolidating cases, second amended consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing, which alleged additional violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5).[3] On May 24, 1988, the Regional Director informed the Respondent that no answer had been received to the second amended complaint and that if one was not received by June 1, 1988, a Motion for Summary Judgment would be filed. By a letter to the Regional Director dated May 26, 1988, the Respondents' attorney stated that the Respondents no longer exist, that all assets had been seized by the secured creditor, and that there was no client on whose behalf he could answer. On July 20, 1988, the General Counsel filed a motion to transfer case to and continue proceeding before the Board and for summary judgment. On July 22, 1988, the Board transferred the proceeding to the Board and issued a Notice to Show Cause to the Respondents. The Respondents have not responded to the Notice to Show Cause. The allegations in the motion are therefore undisputed.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

In its Motion for Summary Judgment the General Counsel contends that the Respondents have failed to file an answer to the second amended complaint and that under Sections 102.24 and 102.50 of the Board's Rules and Regulations the Board should find all the allegations of the second amended consolidated complaint to be true and issue an order on such findings. The Respondents, however, filed answers to the original consolidated complaint and the amended consolidated complaint. The Respondents' amended answer denies the commerce allegations, supervisory status allegations, antiunion motive allegations, the retaliation for cooperation with the Board motive allegation, the unilateral change allegations, and the alleged union requests for bargaining and for information, as well as many of the allegations of the Respondents' conduct.

That answer also denies the supervisory status of all those alleged to have committed the additional unfair labor practice set out in the second amended consolidated complaint. There is no evidence that the answer or amended answer was withdrawn. Accordingly, we find that the Respondents' answers to the consolidated complaint and the amended consolidated complaint satisfy their obligation under Section 102.20 to file a timely answer, and we decline to grant the Motion for Summary Judgment. Auburn Die Co., 282 NLRB 1044 (1987), Marko Contractors, 269 NLRB 990 (1984).

ORDER

It is ordered that the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment is denied.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the proceeding be remanded to the Regional Director for Region 3 for further appropriate action.

---

[1] This complaint was based on a charge filed by the Union in Case 3–CA–13434 on September 16, 1986, and amended on September 23 and October 20, 1986; a charge filed by the Union in Case 3–CA–13646 on February 2, 1987; a charge filed by the Union in Case 3–CA–13832 on June 8, 1987; a charge filed by the Union in Case 3–CA–13902 on August 4, 1987; and a charge filed by the Union in Case 3–CA–13954 on September 4, 1987.

[2] The amended consolidated complaint was based on a charge in Case 3–CA–14124 filed by the Union on December 18, 1987, and an amended charge filed on January 7, 1988, as well as the charges described earlier.

[3] The second amended consolidated complaint was based on charges in Case 3–CA–14253 filed by the Union on March 14, 1988, as well as the charges described earlier.